Strike continues as UAW rejects deal

Union leader says automakers' offers so far are falling short

BY GERRIT DE VYNCK

The president of the United Auto Workers on Sunday rejected a public offer by Jeep parent company Stellantis to boost pay 21 percent over four years, pushing a historic, coordinated strike against the nation's three biggest carmakers through the weekend.

Stellantis, which is based in the Netherlands and was formed in 2021 through a merger of Fiat Chrysler and France's Peugeot, said Saturday that it had offered the union a "highly competitive" 21 percent wage increase. The union said it had "reasonably productive" conversations with Ford on Saturday and was planning to meet with GM as well. Both of those companies have offered 20 percent raises over four years.

But on Sunday morning, UAW President Shawn Fain said that Stellantis's 21 percent offer and other terms presented by the automakers aren't sufficient and that the strike will continue.

"That's definitely a no go," Fain said on CBS's "Face the Nation." He added: "We've asked for 40 percent pay increases. And the reason we asked for 40 percent pay increases is because in the last four years alone, the CEO pay went up 40 percent."

About 12,700 UAW members, or 8 percent of the union's autoworkers, went on strike Friday, demanding pay increases and more-equal treatment and benefits for temporary workers, who have seen their pay lag behind full-time workers for years. It's

A Navy chaplain struggles to find relief from the military after her first son was stillborn

BY IAN SHAPIRA

The pain surged throughout her lower body.

Navy chaplain Mercedes Petitfrere, 20 weeks pregnant with her first child, rushed to the emergency room at her military hospital in Jacksonville, N.C. Her abdomen throbbed. She could hardly walk. It hurt to pee. A midwife at Naval Medical Center Camp Lejeune attributed her pain to fibroids. But Petitfrere — a 35-year-old Black lieutenant whose pregnancy was considered high-risk because of her age — explained that she'd had the benign growths in her uterus for a long time, and that they had never caused any pain.

The hospital, she later said in a claim filed with the Navy, ignored her distress, told her fibroid pain was normal during pregnancy and expressed no concern about their discovery that she was having contractions. That day, Petitfrere was sent home and took prescription-strength Tylenol that was given to her by the midwife.

MOVES PRECEDED PRIGOZHIN'S DEATH

Greater value on loyalty than military competence

BY FRANCESCA EBEL

A day before the airplane disaster that killed Wagner mercenary chief Yevgeniy Prigozhin, Gen. Sergei Surovikin, a Prigozhin ally known as "General Armageddon," was removed as head of Russia's air force.

Surovikin's ouster was not the only hint that a consolidation was underway among the commanders of Russia's war in Ukraine.

Three days earlier, the Kremlin announced that President Vladimir Putin had visited the main headquarters for the war along with Gen. Valery Gerasimov, the chief of the general staff. For months, Gerasimov had rarely been seen in public and, along with Defense Minister Sergei Shoigu, had been a frequent target of Prigozhin's scathing public tirades accusing Russia's regular military leadership of incompetence.

At the headquarters in Rostov-on-Don — the same one that Prigozhin and Wagner fighters seized during a brief, extraordinary rebellion in June — Putin shook Gerasimov's hand and they walked together past a wall of portraits of decorated officers. With a smile, Putin greeted his "comrade officers" before attending a closed meeting with soldiers.

The message was clear: Shoigu and Gerasimov remain in charge, serving at Putin's pleasure. Meanwhile, their external critics and internal rivals were being silenced or sidelined.

Some 96 hours after the Rostov visit, Prigozhin, who achieved Russia's only significant territorial gain so far this year by capturing the city of Bakhmut, was dead, thus eliminating the most prominent pro-war critic of the Russian military's failures in Ukraine.

The Wagner plane crash remains shrouded in mystery. A Prigozhin confidant who spoke out has raised two theories: that Prigozhin and two top deputies were assassinated by the Russian government, meaning that no one

The scorched-earth activist set on taking down Hunter Biden

BY MERYL KORNFIELD

When Lunden Roberts needed an expert to help prove that Hunter Biden had the money to keep making substantial child support payments for their 4-year-old daughter, her legal team turned to Garrett Ziegler.

Ziegler doesn't have a degree in personal finance. He doesn't personally know the president's son. But Ziegler, whose first job out of college was working as a low-level aide in the Trump White House, has fashioned himself into a Hunter Biden specialist, compiling personal and financial records from anywhere he can get them. Then, his nonprofit posts them online.

Ziegler claims this cache offers the fullest accounting of Hunter Biden's life, from his battles with drug addiction to his sexual escapades to his business dealings. "In the Western world, I'm confident that nobody has dug into the American first family more than us," he said recently on YouTube. "I've just become obsessed with studying the family."

Ziegler, 27, enjoys a following of tens of thousands on social media and the attention of conservative media. He has made himself a chief antagonist of the younger Biden, prompting lawsuits, an Internal Revenue Service complaint and other legal pushback from Hunter Biden's circle.

Ziegler is at the vanguard of a sprawling network of Biden antagonists, from right-wing media organizations to congressional leaders to MAGA activists, that is

Rise in entrepreneurship driven by people of color and women, study finds

BY ABHA BHATTARAI

Americans are starting and running their own businesses at record rates, part of a post-pandemic shift toward entrepreneurship led by women and people of color, according to a new report.

Nearly 1 in 5 adults — 19 percent — are in the process of founding a business or have done so in the past 3½ years, according to the Global Entrepreneurship Monitor, an annual report by Babson College released Thursday. That is the highest level since the survey began in 1999.

"We're seeing an upward trend in entrepreneurship that's continued through the pandemic, and that's a really great sign," said Donna Kelley, a professor at Babson College and the report's lead author. "It means businesses are introducing innovation, creating jobs and contributing to the competitiveness of the United States."

Globally, the United States had the third-highest entrepreneurship rate among 21 high-income

DeSantis boosts his vaccine criticism as a campaign issue

BY HANNAH KNOWLES AND FENIT NIRAPPIL

Late in 2021, Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis dodged a question about whether he got a booster shot to protect against covid-19.

"So, I've done whatever I did . . . the normal shot, and that at the end of the day is people's individual decisions about what they want to do," DeSantis said on the same day former president Donald Trump got booed for saying he received a booster.

Now a candidate for president who is regularly critical of the vaccines, DeSantis last week took a sharper stance in response to a new booster shot recommended by federal health officials.

"I will not stand by and let the FDA [Food and Drug Administration] and CDC [Centers for Disease Control and Prevention] use healthy Floridians as guinea pigs for new booster shots that have not been proven to be safe or effective," the governor said in a written statement released after his surgeon general urged people under 65 not to get a booster. He reiterated that position the next day on the talk show of Iowa-based commentator Steve Deace, saying federal health authorities have been "corrupted by ideology."

DeSantis's posture against the boosters — which is at odds with the advice of public health officials and experts — shows how his skepticism of the coronavirus vaccines has hardened and how he has sought to make his position a 2024 campaign issue. Covid-19 is one of a handful of policy areas in

GOP hopefuls ramp up war talk over Mexican border

Analysts say proposals rely on misguided ideas about drug trafficking

BY ISAAC ARNSDORF AND MARY BETH SHERIDAN

SERGIO FLORES FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis on the campaign trail in Texas in June. He has said he would send Special Forces over the border "on day one." GOP presidential candidates often frame their eagerness for warfare on the border in contrast to more distant military entanglements.

Former president Donald Trump proposed a naval blockade of Mexico. Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis pledged to send drones and Special Forces over the southern border starting "on day one." And investor Vivek Ramaswamy imagined launching a "shock-and-awe" military campaign against drug cartels.

Republican candidates are engaged in a rhetorical arms race, vying to one-up each other with tough talk on the U.S. border with Mexico, taking the 2016 rallying cry of Trump to "build the wall" to the next level. The bellicose proposals reflect widespread Republican outrage over immigration, as well as the ongoing crisis of opioid deaths. "It's now time for America to wage war on the cartels," Trump said in a campaign video.

But Mexican officials and independent security analysts have cautioned that military force by the United States would fail to quickly stop drug trafficking while torching relations with its southern neighbor and risking significant casualties.

"I understand the political appeal of holing out one of these guys at 50 yards," said Justin Logan, director of defense and foreign policy studies at the Cato Institute, a libertarian think tank. "It is not a 1950s Western with guys in white hats and guys in black hats. It is a very serious and tricky problem that is tough to solve with a hammer. You could wind up with an awful lot of bloodshed on the border and plenty of fentanyl to go around, which would be the worst of all possible outcomes."

The Republican candidates frequently frame their eagerness for warfare on the southern border in contrast to more far-flung military entanglements, particularly in Ukraine, as Republican support for a prolonged commitment there shows signs of waning.

Despite widespread public disenchantment with the U.S. wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, the Republican proposals now often draw on those conflicts as models for strikes in Mexico. Trump compared attacking drug cartels to the 2017 campaign against the ISIS terrorist group, and Ramaswamy referenced the assassinations of al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden in 2012 and Iranian general Qasem Soleimani in 2020.

Security analysts said those proposals rely on a misguided idea of how drug trafficking works in Mexico. Falko Ernst, a Mexico analyst for the International Crisis Group, said that comparisons to combating ISIS are wrong. Those Islamist militants were imposed from the outside.

Mexican traffickers, in contrast, are often deeply embedded in their communities. Republicans have "the illusion you have a clearly delineated threat" in Mexico that "stands apart from the rest of society, politics and the economy, one that can be surgically removed, a cancer-like growth in the body," Ernst said. "It just doesn't work that way."

Mexican officials have reacted angrily to the Republican proposals to unilaterally enter their country's territory. "We're not going to be anybody's piñata," President Andrés Manuel López Obrador said last month after DeSantis made his comments in the first Republican primary debate about deploying Special Forces against Mexican fentanyl producers.

The Republicans want "to come over and hunt for narco traffickers, violating our sovereignty, something we are never going to allow," López Obrador said in his daily news conference. He has also said he would urge Americans of Mexican origin to vote against Republicans if their "aggression" continues.

In April, Marcelo Ebrard, at the time the Mexican foreign minister, told The Washington Post that a U.S. military strike on fentanyl labs in Mexico would "destroy all the security cooperation between Mexico and the United States," saying he considered it unlikely.

Still, the issue persists in the Republican primary. An NBC News poll released in June found 55 percent of all voters and 86 percent of Republican primary voters said they would be more likely to back a candidate who "supports deploying the U.S. military to the Mexican border to stop illegal drugs from entering the country."

Public opinion of sending American forces into Mexican territory has not been widely tested in recent surveys.

"There is no magic wand, military or otherwise, that the U.S. government can wave and make this problem go away," said Brian Finucane, a senior adviser at the International Crisis Group. "The danger is that they risk normalizing the idea that the use of force is an appropriate policy response, and given the weak practical guardrails on the president, they make ideas that should be clearly off the table on the table."

In addition to a naval embargo, Trump said he would designate cartels as terrorist organizations and order the use of Special Forces, cyber forces and covert actions. "President Trump was the first one to propose an aggressive plan to dismantle the criminal trafficking networks that are destroying lives and communities on both sides of the border," campaign spokesman Steven Cheung said. "Biden has destroyed the border. President Trump will destroy the cartels."

JOSE MENDEZ/EPA-EFE/SHUTTERSTOCK

"We're not going to be anybody's piñata," Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador said in response to DeSantis. He has blamed the fentanyl problem in part on the U.S. demand for drugs.

DeSantis pushed back at criticism from López Obrador in remarks to reporters this month. "If he honestly wanted to get things right, he should be welcoming our support to try to stop what the cartels are doing," he said. "We need to have a more modern version of a Monroe Doctrine," he added, referring to the 1823 declaration by President James Monroe that foreign powers should respect U.S. hegemony in the Western hemisphere.

At campaign stops, DeSantis said he would deploy deadly force at the southern border, leaving drug traffickers "stone cold dead." The super PAC supporting him followed up with a video ad and merchandise using the catchphrase "stone cold dead."

DeSantis elaborated on his proposed rules of engagement in an August interview with NBC News. "They got the satchel of fentanyl strapped to their back, you use deadly force against them, you lay them out, you will see a change of behavior," he said. "You have to take the fight to the cartels, otherwise we're going to continue to see Americans dying."

In the first Republican primary debate, DeSantis said he would send Special Forces over the border "on day one." A campaign spokeswoman later suggested he was not speaking literally about deploying troops into Mexico territory as soon as Inauguration Day.

Ramaswamy, a long-shot first-time candidate who started voicing the idea of military force against Mexico on the campaign trail, has repeatedly compared an offensive there to the actions against terrorists in the Middle East. "I am yet to get a good answer from anyone on why we can't just do this to solve the cartel problem and fentanyl problem," he said in a February social media video. His campaign did not respond to a request for comment.

Other Republican candidates, such as former United Nations ambassador Nikki Haley and Sen. Tim Scott (S.C.), have expressed support for sending Special Forces, ground troops or drones into Mexican territory. Former New Jersey governor Chris Christie and former Arkansas governor Asa Hutchinson have advocated deploying the military to the border while pressuring Mexico to police its own territory. Former vice president Mike Pence has said he would send Special Forces in partnership with Mexican forces.

U.S. authorities have said most fentanyl comes into the country through legal ports of entry rather than the desert gaps between border crossings, and those detained with the drug are far more likely to be U.S. citizens rather than migrants.

In recent years, drug traffickers have become more entrenched in Mexican communities. Their organizations have diversified into extortion, domestic drug sales, illegal timber-cutting, sex trafficking and other illegal businesses, earning fortunes and employing thousands of workers.

The traffickers have long had ties to Mexican politicians and security forces, and those ties appear to have only strengthened as they expand their territorial control. They "are groups that provide votes, move votes and provide campaign financing," Ernst said.

The U.S. government for years backed a strategy of targeting Mexican narcotics kingpins like Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman. While many were captured, the drug trade continues to flourish, in part because of strong U.S. demand for cocaine, methamphetamines and heroin.

It is particularly difficult to stop fentanyl trafficking because labs are small and can be located indoors. They do not emit heat signatures or smelly fumes, as methamphetamine labs do. Fentanyl is also highly concentrated and can be smuggled over the border in a backpack or suitcase, or hidden in truckloads of fruit or other products.

Mexico has reported growing seizures of fentanyl at roadblocks, package delivery offices and other sites. It said it captured 1,700 kilograms of fentanyl in the first half of the year, nearly as much as in all of 2022. But it has busted few fentanyl production labs.

U.S. officials and analysts differ over whether the failure to find more labs reflects a lack of political will or capacity. Mexico spends only around 1 percent of its GDP on security, less than most industrialized countries. Its security forces lack investigative authority, and the justice system has a poor record of securing convictions.

López Obrador has blamed the fentanyl problem on the U.S. demand for drugs and Chinese production of precursor chemicals. The U.S. government said Mexico overtook China in 2019 to become the top producer of the deadly drug for the American market.

Unilateral military action could be costly for the United States. Mexico is its top trading partner and has played a key role in controlling the flow of migrants headed for the southern border. "It's not like Mexico doesn't have leverage here, including through migration and near-shoring and energy," Ernst said. Near-shoring refers to moving offshore manufacturing to Mexico from more distant locations such as China.

Some Republicans, notably Rep. Dan Crenshaw of Texas, have pointed to the U.S. military's anti-drug cooperation with Colombia as a possible model. But the Mexican army has long been wary of the U.S. armed forces, in part due to American military invasions in the 19th and early 20th centuries.

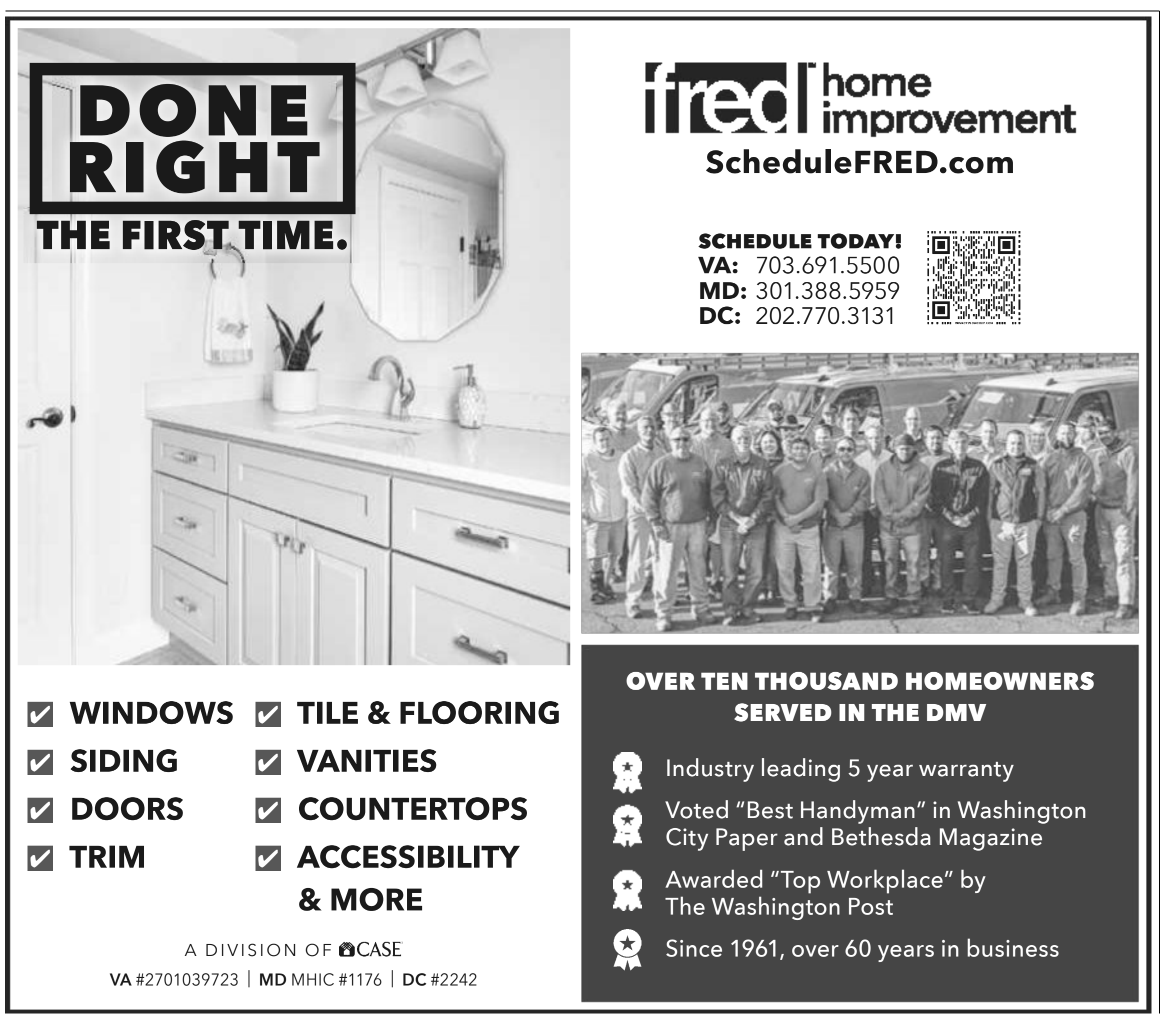

Tensions flared after the former Mexican defense minister, Salvador Cienfuegos, was arrested in 2020 in Los Angeles on drug charges.

The Trump administration ultimately dropped the charges, citing the importance of the bilateral relationship, and Cienfuegos returned home. The Mexican military has grown more powerful under López Obrador, who has given it additional responsibilities such as running airports and building railroads, as well as battling drug traffickers.

"The Mexican military will not accept gringo overlordship," said Federico Estévez, a Mexican political scientist.

He noted that Cienfuegos had appeared at a recent Mexican military ceremony. "They stood him front and center," he said. "The message is clear."

Sheridan reported from Mexico City.

Haley betting big on electability message to win in 2024

The former S.C. governor's poll numbers were boosted after August's GOP debate, but donors and voters wonder whether she has a path to the nomination

BY DYLAN WELLS, MARIANNE LEVINE AND MAEVE RESTON

JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

Former U.N. ambassador and South Carolina governor Nikki Haley speaks at the Conservative Political Action Conference in Maryland in March. Haley is seeking to cast herself as the only candidate that can defeat President Biden in the general election.

BOILING SPRINGS, S.C. — Frank Williams brought a homemade sign to Nikki Haley's campaign event this month featuring her and President Biden's results in a hypothetical matchup, scrawled in red marker: "Nikki 49%, Biden 43%."

The sign — based on a CNN poll released the same day that found Haley was the only Republican presidential candidate with a clear lead over Biden — underscored the electability argument that has been central to Haley's campaign and has helped win over independent and unaffiliated voters like Williams, who said he likes Donald Trump's policies but fears he can't win in November 2024.

"Frankly, I want to support him just because of the way they're treating Trump; I want to vote for him just because to me, it's political prosecution, political persecution," said Williams, referencing the 91 state and federal charges the former president faces. "But I think Nikki's a better candidate."

"Because of some of the positions she's taken, she's going to be better accepted in a general election. The primary problem, of course, is, can she win a primary," Williams fretted while waiting at a brewery for the former U.N. ambassador and governor of South Carolina.

That is a glaring question confronting Haley, who has picked up steam since a well-received debate performance last month, drawing big crowds on the trail and making gains in recent polls but still running well behind Trump with the next debate less than two weeks away. At her event here, Haley hit on the themes she has emphasized for months, telling attendees that "Republicans have lost the last seven out of eight popular votes for president; that's nothing to be proud of" and that voters should not "complain about what happens in a general election if you don't play in this primary." She echoed her past argument that Republicans, not just Democrats, are at fault for the national debt.

Haley has found an audience as she leans hard into the general election message and tries to seize on the momentum from her debate performance. She and her allies argue that she is the challenger Democrats fear the most, and that her stance on issues like abortion and Ukraine will help her win over constituencies like disaffected Republicans and suburban women.

But in a party dominated by Trump, in which a sizable number of primary voters still believe the false narrative that he won in 2020, the electability argument may go only so far. Though the first debate boosted Haley in polls and in her fundraising, many major GOP donors are still sitting on the sidelines as Trump continues to dominate the Republican field.

Haley's debate performance highlighted the tricky tightrope she's trying to walk. While she said she would back Trump as the nominee, even if he is convicted on felony charges, she also warned that his nomination carries political risk.

"We have to face the fact that Trump is the most disliked politician in America. We can't win a general election that way," Haley said on the debate stage in Milwaukee, emerging as one of the sharpest critics of the former president in a televised showdown he skipped.

Some major donors who were eager to back an alternative to the former president have been hesitant to invest in Haley, questioning whether she has a path to the nomination as she tries to navigate her complex relationship with Trump — as his former ambassador turned sometime-critic — and finesse her establishment-candidate image while vying for support within a heavily populist GOP base.

Though many key donors share Haley's views, some have concerns that her position on issues like support for Ukraine are out of sync with the increasingly isolationist drift of the Republican Party under Trump. And some of the donors who committed early to Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis are skittish about investing once again after watching his campaign falter despite its enormous resources and the high expectations for his candidacy.

Republican strategist Terry Sullivan noted that Haley seems to have adopted the posture of the "responsible conservative" at a moment when that isn't exactly what the Republican primary electorate is yearning for: "If you're looking for someone to say, 'Hey, we really should be eating our vegetables,' Nikki Haley might be your candidate," Sullivan said.

> "If you're looking for someone to say, 'Hey, we really should be eating our vegetables,' Nikki Haley might be your candidate. There seems to be a lot of Big Mac, fast food dwellers in the Republican Party right now."
> Terry Sullivan, Republican strategist

"There seems to be a lot of Big Mac, fast food dwellers in the Republican Party right now."

In a Washington Post-Monmouth University poll of South Carolina this month, Haley came in second to Trump at 18 percent, triple her support in national polls following last month's debate. The poll found her support is relatively high among low-turnout and less-certain voters, and that she appeals most to potential primary voters who identify as moderate and liberal (26 percent), compared with 18 percent among those who identify as somewhat conservative voters and 10 percent among those who are very conservative.

But on the electability front, a 54 percent majority of Republicans say Trump is definitely or probably the strongest candidate to beat Biden, compared with 42 percent who think another candidate would be stronger. The South Carolina Republican voters polled were roughly split on whether they prefer a candidate who agrees with them on major issues or can beat Biden, but most electability-focused voters see Trump as having the best chance to defeat the president next year.

"He's actually been president of the United States, and to make the argument that he can't win is kind of foolish, especially with everything we've gone through in the last four years," said Iowa-based GOP consultant Craig Robinson.

Rep. Ralph Norman (R-S.C.), a top Haley ally who also worked closely with the former president, said, "I love Trump, but he brings out Democrats to vote against him; a lot of people stay home because they don't, for some reason, don't like him."

Preya Samsundar, a spokeswoman for a pro-Haley super PAC, similarly argued that Haley is best equipped to galvanize voters who might stay home if Trump is the nominee.

"When you look at the party, our main struggle since Donald Trump became president is that we lost ground in the suburbs and we've lost ground with suburban women in particular, and I think Nikki Haley is our key to gaining that ground again," she said.

Many of Haley's supporters in her home state described themselves as former Republicans who drifted away from the party because of Trump and who are concerned that more GOP voters do not share their concerns about his electability.

Several cited Haley's abortion stance — a call for consensus, not a specific number of weeks of pregnancy at which a ban should be implemented on the procedure — as appealing to their more moderate tendencies.

Deena Giles, a resident of Spartanburg who attended Haley's event, said that she wants anyone but Trump and that Haley impressed her at the debate. Giles said that she appreciated when Haley came out against Trump after the attack on the Capitol on Jan. 6, 2021, but that she feels like Haley has wavered in the years since and wants her to sharpen her criticism of the former president.

"I became a grandmother in 2016 right before the election. And I said, I will — I could never tell a grandchild that I voted for Trump. So in the past two elections, I did not vote for president," Giles, 64, said.

Joyce and Ken Stoppelbein, who described themselves as moderate conservatives, also chose not to vote for president in 2016, after being unable to decide between Trump and Hillary Clinton. In 2020, Joyce voted for Trump, and Ken voted for Biden — canceling each other out.

The Greer, S.C., residents said they are concerned that more people don't care about electability.

"I think he did some good things as a Republican when he was in office. I think he is a despicable human being. So I really have trouble thinking about voting for him," said Joyce Stoppelbein. "I don't know what I'd have to do if it were Trump and Biden; I don't know what I would do."

While Haley has made gains with voters in South Carolina, the state won't vote until after Iowa and New Hampshire. She has spent a nearly equal amount of time in both of those states, but some Republican strategists say she may have better odds in New Hampshire, where her stance on abortion could appeal more to its moderate Republicans than to the more conservative caucus-goers in Iowa, where she faces a tougher challenge overall.

"Every time the Republicans put forward a moderate, we lose elections," argued Aaron Johnson, a Des Moines resident. He said Haley is "not conservative enough" for his liking and more willing to compromise on abortion than he is.

Grant Woods, 22, said in an interview at the Cy-Hawk rivalry football game in Iowa that while Trump is not the "perfect option," he is not concerned about his appeal to a general electorate because he thinks the indictments are empowering his base and Biden has "low approval" anyway.

Haley has run a leaner campaign than many of her rivals since early this year, but her modest fundraising hauls have capped her ability to build out an operation that capitalizes on the momentum she has seen since the debate.

Haley donor Bill Strong cited the campaign's and PAC's limited spending and Americans just starting to tune in at the end of the summer as reasons she did not pick up more traction before the debate.

As evidence of Haley's potential to overcome DeSantis as the most viable challenger to Trump, her allies have pointed to key defections like former Illinois governor Bruce Rauner, who gave more than $950,000 to DeSantis's political committee in Florida last year but is now backing Haley in the presidential race.

However there has not been a stampede of DeSantis donors rushing to support Haley, even as she gains on him in some polls.

In an interview, Rauner said the breadth of Haley's experience, her warmth and her ability to connect with disaffected GOP voters — particularly women — who left the party during the Trump years would make her the strongest candidate against Biden in the general election.

He predicted that many GOP voters would ultimately conclude that Trump's conduct is disqualifying and that he would probably be defeated by Biden if he becomes the nominee.

"We're just going to keep executing our game plan on all fronts, whether it's donors, meeting more Americans, more policy stuff, getting more media," Strong said. "But we're not changing things; we're happy where we are, and we're making progress."

House Republicans propose 30-day funding bill Senate is likely to reject

BY MARIANNA SOTOMAYOR AND LEIGH ANN CALDWELL

Half a dozen House Republicans announced a proposed deal Sunday to temporarily fund the government with the goal of averting a shutdown at the end of the month. But it is far from certain that the proposal would unite their fractious conference to send a bill to the Senate, where it is expected to be rejected.

The short-term funding bill would keep the government running until Oct. 31 and trigger a 1 percent cut to current fiscal levels, according to the plan released just before lawmakers were briefed Sunday evening.

The 1 percent cut is an average for the federal budget. The Defense Department and the Department of Veterans Affairs would not receive any cuts, while other government agencies would have their budgets slashed by 8 percent until the end of October.

The effort is meant to garner support from hard-right lawmakers who demanded significant cuts to support a short-term funding extension.

The short-term extension would include a border security bill that House Republicans passed through their narrow ranks earlier this year but would leave out a divisive policy on verifying workers' immigration status. The plan also includes provisions on the border that will be added to the Homeland Security appropriations bill in an effort to extract concessions from the Senate on the issue when both chambers negotiate on funding the government for a full fiscal year.

Missing from the proposal are requests from President Biden for more than $20 billion in aid for Ukraine and $16 billion in disaster relief. Both Democratic and Republican Senate leaders have said they would tack money for those matters on to any short-term funding bill.

Striking an apparent deal is a significant, albeit small, step for the House Republican Conference, whose leaders must now gather enough support for the measure to pass and fulfill a request by Speaker Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) to show a united conservative front ahead of inevitable negotiations with the Senate.

While many involved in the deal are telegraphing that these parameters should ensure that the bill gets the necessary 218 Republican votes to pass, vocal lawmakers initially panned the development. Several of the conservative demands are also likely to be rejected by the Senate, pitting both chambers against each other with less than a dozen days to spare to prevent a partial government shutdown.

The proposal was not negotiated by leadership. Instead, six House Republican members from two of the five ideological factions — Reps. Dusty Johnson (S.D.), Stephanie I. Bice (Okla.) and Kelly Armstrong (N.D.) from the pragmatic Main Street Caucus; and Reps. Scott Perry (Pa.), Chip Roy (Tex.) and Byron Donalds (Fla.) from the Freedom Caucus — initially met for 2½ hours Wednesday night to hash out parameters of a potential agreement after far-right lawmakers prevented a floor vote funding the Defense Department until demands were met.

"House Freedom Caucus members have worked over the weekend with the Main Street Caucus on a path forward to fund the government and secure America's border," Perry said in a statement Sunday.

Earlier Sunday, McCarthy said that he would bring the proposal "to the floor, win or lose."

"I've been through shutdowns, and I've never seen somebody win a shutdown. 'Cause when you shut down, you give all your power to the administration," McCarthy said on "Sunday Morning Futures" on Fox News. "How are you going to win your arguments to secure the border if the border agents don't get paid?"

Republican lawmakers returned to Washington last week having had some conversations about what their conference could agree on for short-term funding to allow them time to work on full-year appropriation bills, which is a demand the far-right flank made of McCarthy to support him for the speakership earlier this year.

GOP lawmakers from New York, a group that flipped Democratic-held districts and helped clinch the House majority last year, insisted on making border security a priority in the short-term bill given the recent influx of migrants to the state.

McCarthy began last week offering several proposals by largely stressing that a 30-day funding bill include border security and possibly disaster relief aid. McCarthy reiterated to House Republicans that they had to unite in sending funding bills to the Senate to ensure they maintain an upper hand in future negotiations. That message was undercut when House leadership was unable to wrangle enough votes for a noncontroversial procedural hurdle that would have paved the way to pass a Defense Department funding bill.

The latest proposal began to emerge Tuesday during a weekly meeting among lawmakers with the five ideological "families" within the conference, according to people familiar with the ongoing negotiations. During that Elected Leadership Committee gathering, Johnson and Donalds both found common ground to include border security in any deal. Rep. Garret Graves (La.), who was chosen by McCarthy to chair the ELC, tasked both of them with hashing out a conservative funding deal.

By Wednesday evening, Johnson, Donalds and four colleagues worked on broad parameters that would ultimately be proposed. As negotiations continued for three days, more GOP lawmakers were brought in to be briefed and offer feedback.

Rep. Marcus J. Molinaro (N.Y.) was a key negotiator on the immigration issue, multiple people briefed on the process said, serving as a check on what Republicans who represent districts won by Biden in states such as New York and California could accept. Homeland Security Committee Chairman Mark Green (Tenn.) and David Joyce (Ohio), who chairs the Appropriations subcommittee on homeland security, also advised on the issue. A deal was struck Saturday evening.

Johnson and Donalds briefed their colleagues about the deal on the call. Several lawmakers rebuked it, asking for guarantees that no money would ultimately be added by the Senate on Ukraine and for spending levels to stay low.

"I'm a NO," Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene (Ga.), a staunch ally of McCarthy who has often sided with him over her far-right colleagues, wrote on X. "No money for Ukraine, COVID, or weaponized Gov. America First!"

While the proposal does not include money for Ukraine, hard-right lawmakers do not support extending funds for fighting the coronavirus or for the Justice Department, which many Republicans claim is unfairly targeting former president Donald Trump.

Republican leaders now face the difficult task of ensuring the bill passes through their razor-thin margins, as Democrats are not expected to help pass the bill.

The first test for leaders will be a vote on a procedural hurdle, known as the rule, which sets parameters for debating the bill on the floor before passage. Members of the Freedom Caucus and lawmakers who oppose McCarthy have previously threatened voting against the rule.

If McCarthy relies on Democrats to approve a rule or a final passage, it would anger far-right lawmakers who spent last week threatening that such a move would trigger a motion to vacate him from the speakership.

DeSantis's bashing of boosters troubles medical experts which DeSantis clashes with Trump, the clear polling leader in the Republican race. With federal health authorities endorsing the updated formula for the coronavirus vaccine ahead of a seasonal wave of respiratory illnesses, DeSantis, who is running a distant second in many polls, is leaning further into a longtime contrast with Trump, who last week defended his role in the vaccine rollout.

"This sudden resurfacing of [covid-19 news] has created a little bit of an opportunity for him," said Florida-based pollster Brad Coker, "and he certainly seems to be taking advantage of it."

The new coronavirus shots, recommended by the CDC for everyone 6 months and older, are updated to target the XBB lineage of variants that now accounts for most infections.

There is a nuanced debate within the public health field about the value of urging the updated boosters for everyone rather than just people at higher risk from a coronavirus infection. But even some experts wary of blanket recommendations were critical of the DeSantis administration's warning.

"It's dangerous," said Paul Offit, director of the Vaccine Education Center at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

He worries that recommending boosters for everyone could distract from the urgency of boosting those at risk of severe disease, but he said Florida officials went too far by dissuading young people who are immunocompromised or have other risk factors for severe disease from getting the new shots and casting doubt on coronavirus vaccination more broadly. "They have been given a platform and abused it," he said.

Florida Surgeon General Joseph Ladapo, a DeSantis appointee who issued the booster shot warnings, previously discouraged young men from receiving coronavirus vaccines because of the risks of heart complications. The CDC and the FDA responded with an open letter rebutting his claims and charging he was spreading misinformation. A University of Florida medical school faculty task force determined he relied upon a flawed analysis, and experts have noted the risk of heart complications from contracting coronavirus is greater than the risks associated with vaccination.

In response to DeSantis's criticism of the new boosters, CDC Director Mandy Cohen said the vaccine has been proved safe and effective after thorough and independent review.

"Since this Administration's launch of the largest adult vaccination program in our nation's history, COVID-19 vaccines have saved millions of lives and kept countless people out of the hospital," Cohen said in a written statement. "Public health experts are in broad agreement about these facts, and efforts to undercut vaccine uptake are unfounded and dangerous."

The Florida Department of Health and the governor's office did not respond to requests for comment.

THOMAS SIMONETTI FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis, seen with first lady Casey DeSantis at an Aug. 31 news conference in Steinhatchee, Fla., last week accused federal agencies of trying to use "healthy Floridians as guinea pigs for new booster shots that have not been proven to be safe or effective."

DeSantis burst onto many GOP voters' radars because of his response to the coronavirus pandemic. As a first-term governor, he reopened his state quicker than most and became a vocal opponent of mask mandates, vaccine mandates and school shutdowns.

Initially, he joined other leaders from both parties in promoting coronavirus vaccines, attending the vaccination of a 94-year-old military veteran live on "Fox & Friends." When Florida hospitals were overwhelmed by unvaccinated patients during the surge of the delta variant in summer 2021, DeSantis's aides touted the state's high vaccination rate among seniors and the steps the governor took to promote shots.

But he and many conservative voters eventually turned against the shots and, late last year, DeSantis called for a Florida grand jury to investigate any "wrongdoing" related to them.

On the campaign trail, DeSantis often calls for "accountability" for those involved in the coronavirus response at the national level, saying that — unlike Trump — he would have fired Anthony S. Fauci, a longtime medical adviser who played a key role.

While DeSantis's covid-19 response has always been core to his political identity — it's often the first thing Republican voters praise about him — the updated booster shots and some scattered new masking measures at schools have put the issue back in the news.

CHRIS O'MEARA/AP

Florida Surgeon General Joseph A. Ladapo last year warned young men to not get vaccines, drawing criticism from health leaders.

DeSantis supporters also pounced on an interview Trump did last week with conservative podcast host Megyn Kelly, who pressed Trump on whether he regretted aspects of the federal coronavirus response, including the rollout of vaccines.

Trump told Kelly he hears from Democratic friends: " 'I don't understand one thing: Why don't you talk more about the vaccine. It was one of the greatest things you've ever done.' . . . I say, 'I'm not going to talk about it one way or the other.' "

Steven Cheung, a spokesman for Trump's campaign, did not respond directly Friday when asked if Trump has a position on the new booster shots. Instead, he reiterated Trump's criticisms of DeSantis on covid-19, emphasizing that the governor enacted shutdowns early on and saying Trump never mandated vaccines and "left it up to the states and their governors to choose what was best for their people."

Bryan Griffin, press secretary for the DeSantis campaign, said in a statement that DeSantis is "the only candidate with a proven record of fighting back and capable of bringing a reckoning for the wrongdoings committed."

DeSantis has shied away from criticizing Trump on many fronts and often focused on touting his own record. His campaign recently released a video showcasing DeSantis's covid-19 response without mentioning Trump — prompting some Republicans, including Deace, the Iowa commentator, to suggest he should hit Trump more directly on the issue.

"I think he is getting there," Deace, who supports DeSantis for president, said in an interview, when asked if he wished DeSantis contrasted with Trump more aggressively. "I think they're closer than they were a couple of months ago." On Deace's show Thursday, DeSantis ridiculed Trump's recent comment that he didn't know who gave Fauci a presidential commendation. (It was Trump, according to a White House statement.)

The coronavirus is a distant memory for many voters — and while it intersects with many broader issues important to the GOP base, the virus itself does not register as a major issue of concern for voters, according to recent public polling.

But Republican voters from the early primary state of New Hampshire brought it up unprompted in a recent focus group, according to the moderator, James Johnson of the polling firm J.L. Partners. Some referenced a "plandemic," he said, echoing the false idea that the coronavirus pandemic was a fake crisis created for nefarious purposes. They believed the coronavirus made the 2020 election unfair to Trump, Johnson said, and suggested new coronavirus measures would lead to an unfair 2024 election.

While Trump was the favorite candidate — reflecting national and state-level polling — a couple of voters had doubts about his handling of covid-19 and role in the vaccines, Johnson said. Still, he said, for a Trump-leaning voter, "it didn't feel like that would be enough to switch them off Trump."

The updated coronavirus vaccine is colloquially called a booster, but federal officials avoid that term because it contains a new formula rather than an additional dose of an existing shot. In its guidance advising caution with the new boosters, the Florida Department of Health cited the "absence of any meaningful booster-specific clinical trial data performed in humans." But regulators and leading experts say such research is not necessary to update the formula of a vaccine that has already undergone extensive clinical trials and safety monitoring.

Federal regulators approved the new booster shots based on reviews of manufacturing data and on lab studies showing the updated formula elicited a greater antibody response against the XBB variants compared with the existing boosters.

They say data showing the first versions of the coronavirus mRNA vaccines were safe and effective after tens of millions of doses were administered is enough to offer similar confidence in the updated vaccines because similar manufacturing processes are used for both.

Officials take a similar approach when determining the composition of the annual flu shot months ahead of the flu season.

And they can monitor the effectiveness of the updated boosters as they are deployed, as they did with the most recent booster that proved to be effective in reducing the risk of hospitalization and death.

"Time will tell as vaccine effectiveness studies are carried out in real world in real time as the virus circulates once people have been vaccinated," said Jeffrey Duchin, the top public health official for Seattle and King County, Wash. "But the information we have based on what we know about the science of vaccines, about neutralizing antibody production and our experience with covid-19 vaccines so far suggest that these vaccines will be comparatively effective to our previous vaccines, which means they provide meaningful protection against hospitalization, death, and they provide protection against long covid."

The CDC estimates that 12 percent of Floridians have received the bivalent booster shot that has been available for a year, compared with 17 percent of all Americans. In contrast, 70 percent of Floridians received their initial vaccines before boosters became available — the same rate as Americans overall.

Scott Rivkees, who served as Florida's surgeon general under DeSantis between 2019 and 2021, worries that confidence in vaccines in Florida is eroding — not just for the coronavirus, but also for influenza and respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) ahead of a fall and winter respiratory virus season.

"What will we see is severe illness from these conditions which could be vaccine-preventable for many individuals, particularly those who are medically vulnerable," said Rivkees, who is now a professor at the Brown University School of Public Health.

Asked whether the office he once led can be trusted to provide accurate vaccine information, Rivkees said Floridians should instead turn to the CDC and major medical societies.

Entrepreneurship in U.S. is on the rise economies, lagging behind the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia, but ahead of Canada and the United Kingdom, researchers found.

BUSINESS FROM A1

The recent surge builds on momentum that began early in the pandemic, when sudden job losses spurred many to branch out on their own. Applications for new businesses spiked to an all-time high in July 2020, when more than 550,000 Americans filed paperwork to start their own companies, census data shows. A boost in government funding — in the form of stimulus checks, extra unemployment benefits and small-business loans — gave many people the financial cushion to get started.

"We had covid, we had the 'Great Resignation' — and whenever there are tremendous job losses, it's natural for folks to go out on their own and start a business," said Kathy Korman Frey, director of the Center for Entrepreneurial Excellence at George Washington University.

Since then, business registrations have remained well above pre-pandemic levels. A robust recovery, combined with extra savings and steady consumer spending, have helped encourage new waves of entrepreneurship.

But experts say many small businesses founded in recent years may be reaching a critical turning point. Economic uncertainty, higher costs and a slowdown in consumer spending have created new challenges for nascent companies. Business closures ticked up last year, to 5.2 percent from 2.9 percent in 2019, researchers found.

"It's easy to get started, but maybe not so easy to keep businesses growing," Kelley said. "That's a challenge we need to look at more. Do we need more training? Access to finance? How do we ensure businesses can outlast their initial start-up phase?"

Cheryl Shao, a Boston-area dentist, has spent the past two years designing a device that's a mix between braces and clear aligners. But it's been tough: Many of Shao's partnerships fell through during the pandemic, and although she's won multiple pitch competitions and been part of two start-up accelerators, it's been a struggle to secure the money she needs. She spends 40 hours a week fundraising, she said, and hopes to begin selling the product next year.

"I'm a double minority — Asian and a woman — which has made it much harder to find funding," said Shao, 36. "I kind of fell into entrepreneurship. I had this idea and was excited by the opportunity to really change orthodontics on a bigger scale. But now I'm dedicating all my time to raising enough money to make this a reality."

For minority groups, in particular, starting a business has become a promising alternative to traditional employment. Entrepreneurship rates are highest among Black and Hispanic adults — 35 percent and 27 percent, respectively — compared with 15 percent of White adults, the report found.

Other marginalized groups, such as formerly incarcerated Americans and those with criminal records, are also more likely to be entrepreneurs, according to Kylie Jiwon Hwang, an assistant professor at the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University.

"Oftentimes, when we think of entrepreneurship, we're thinking of high-growth tech start-ups," she said. "But a lot of the entrepreneurship we're seeing comes from the fact that marginalized people continue to face difficulties in employment — not just in finding work, but in moving up."

Latavia Thomas quit her job at AT&T during the pandemic and moved back in with her parents in Long Beach, Calif. She suffered from depression and said it was difficult to get out of bed most days, much less feel motivated to return to a 9-to-5 office job.

Thomas, 36, spent the next several months juggling therapy and cosmetology classes. In early 2021, she started her own business doing makeup and microblading, a form of semi-permanent eyebrow-tattooing. She rents space at a nearby salon, but says she hopes to one day open her own studio that specializes in services for Black and Brown people in the entertainment industry.

"It's been hard, but a good type of hard," she said. "At the end of the day, I'm working for myself."

The latest report from Babson, part of an international partnership with London Business School, offers a snapshot of American entrepreneurship. Adults between the ages of 18 and 34 were nearly twice as likely to start businesses as those between 35 and 64, the report found. And although men are still slightly more likely than women to start their own companies, that gap continues to narrow. There was also a clear shift away from service industries, such as finance and real estate, toward manufacturing and logistics.

A pedestrian looks at buildings housing Black-owned businesses in the Greenwood area of Tulsa in 2020. Entrepreneurship rates are highest among Black and Hispanic adults in the United States.

In south Mississippi, Joseph Smith lost his job at a cell-tower maintenance company early in the pandemic. Stuck at home with little to do, he began selling his homemade soap bars for $5 apiece online — and was surprised when sales took off.

"No one was hiring, so I decided to take this small-scale idea and run with it," said Smith, 40. "The first month was great. We sold a ton of products through Twitter."

But, he said, online sales took a large hit once pandemic-lockdown orders ended and people began venturing out again. Now he sells most of his products at local farmers markets, trade shows and festivals. He's recently added artisanal bread to his line-up of soaps and lotions and hopes to open a mobile bakery.

After three years of working for himself, Smith said he can't imagine going back to a corporate job. He makes all of his products from a spare bedroom and has begun home-schooling his children, ages 9 and 14, while his wife works as a public school teacher.

"I get to hang out with my kids much more than I did when I was in the corporate world," he said. "Entrepreneurship has opened up family time in a way I never thought I could have."

It's great to have an impact, to help people.

A former Trump adviser tries to take down Hunter Biden focused intensely on the president's son. They see Hunter Biden's activities as his father's biggest political vulnerability, a conclusion reflected in the House GOP's recent decision to launch an impeachment inquiry.

On Wednesday, Hunter Biden sued Ziegler in federal court in California, alleging that the activist had violated privacy laws and calling him "a zealot who has waged a sustained, unhinged and obsessed campaign against [Hunter Biden] and the entire Biden family for more than two years."

After Ziegler, who served as a staffer for Trump aide Peter Navarro, a MAGA hard-liner and election denier, left the White House in early 2021, he began focusing his attention on President Biden's son, turning his formidable energy to unearthing every detail he could. Ziegler received some of Hunter Biden's financial records, saying he got them from someone who worked at Biden's bank. He has delved into Hunter Biden's business dealings. He even acquired a copy of the diary of Ashley Biden, Hunter's sister.

But his biggest project has been mining embarrassing information, including nude photos and videos, from what appears to be a personal laptop that Hunter Biden left at a repair shop in April 2019. Ziegler said in an interview that he got a hard drive with the purported contents of the laptop from Rudy Giuliani before the Jan. 6, 2021, attack on the U.S. Capitol.

In October 2022, Ziegler announced that the nonprofit he founded, Marco Polo, had published a voluminous report on the laptop, claiming to have unearthed at least 459 criminal or regulatory violations. This claim has not been verified, and Hunter Biden's team dismisses it as absurd. (The Washington Post has also obtained a hard drive purportedly from the laptop and authenticated some of its contents.)

"We want (our report) to be on coffee tables and bookshelves and be brought out whenever you hear something in the news," Ziegler said in the interview. On his Telegram page, where he has a following of about 100,000, he added, "We believe that it is the deepest digital colonoscopy ever performed on a sitting U.S. first family."

Ziegler has a smaller following than some better-known conservative firebrands. But that relatively low profile allows him to unleash inflammatory attacks with less scrutiny, said Jared Holt, who researches extremists for the Institute for Strategic Dialogue think tank.

"There's an incentive for him to take the extra step and to be just a little more outrageous, because it's the sort of audience he's cultivated and the part of the ecosystem he fits into," Holt said.

Some of Hunter Biden's associates worry that Ziegler, with his sometimes-wild theorizing combined with an encyclopedic knowledge of Hunter Biden's history, will influence the public discussion as well as the House probes of the president's son.

TOP: Garrett Ziegler, a former staffer in the Trump White House, has published damaging information about Hunter Biden. "In the Western world, I'm confident that nobody has dug into the American first family more than us," he said. ABOVE: Ziegler shows a copy of his nonprofit's report on Hunter Biden's laptop.

Ziegler argues that he is filling a vital role by scrutinizing the Bidens, particularly because in his view Republicans are not going after Hunter Biden hard enough. "The right wing has totally f---ed up this response," he said. "It's been frustrating at the pace. Now we're seven months in, and I don't think they've subpoenaed Hunter."

To Democrats, Ziegler and his efforts embody all that is wrong with an era when a single individual can use the internet to humiliate and smear his chosen target. Hunter Biden is a recovering drug addict who has experienced tragedy in his life, they say, and whatever his flaws, they have no bearing on the president's performance.

Ziegler has "shown himself as a reckless, irresponsible chaos agent," said Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-Calif.), a House Judiciary Committee member. At a hearing in July, Swalwell raised concerns about Ziegler's postings attacking federal law enforcement agents.

Ziegler contends that his aggressive actions are justified because his ultimate target is not Hunter Biden, but the president. He asserts that Hunter Biden has been involved for decades in shady business deals with China-based firms and the president has known about it, making the senior Biden beholden to China.

"My focus is never on Hunter Biden — it's only Hunter's relationship to Joe," Ziegler said. "My whole obsession with the Bidens starts and ends with Joe. It doesn't start and end with Hunter."

Hunter Biden's legal team has not taken kindly to Ziegler's efforts. In his recent lawsuit, Hunter alleges that Ziegler and the other members of his nonprofit illegally hacked into portions of Biden's laptop that were encrypted, saying they ignored demands to cease and desist, an allegation Ziegler disputes. Ziegler says he would not "honor" cease-and-desist requests in this matter because he believes his actions have been lawful.

Last February, Hunter Biden's attorney Abbe Lowell challenged the tax-exempt status of Marco Polo's parent company, ICU, writing to the IRS that it "has operated as little more than a thinly disguised political operation to attack the Biden administration and the Biden family." Ziegler said that his personal criticism of the Bidens does not reflect the official views of his nonprofit.

Hunter Biden's friend and benefactor Kevin Morris has also sued Ziegler, accusing him of harassment and doxing. After the child support settlement, for example, Ziegler posted the coordinates of Morris's plane on his public Telegram page and speculated about Morris's potential travels. Ziegler's attorneys have argued in court filings that he was exercising his free-speech rights.

In one of his most notable moves, Ziegler joined the contentious child support case between Roberts, an Arkansas resident, and Hunter Biden over their 4-year-old daughter, Navy. Hunter Biden initially contested his paternity of the girl until a DNA test proved the relationship, and he has said he remembers little of his relationship with Roberts because it occurred when he was in a spiral of drug addiction.

Roberts's lawyers, in seeking to have Ziegler designated an expert witness, contended in a court filing that he was "an expert in Hunter Biden, his life, finances, personal history, financial history, the Biden Companies, and the manner in which the Biden family interacts interpersonally and financially."

Hunter Biden's attorneys initially objected to Ziegler's inclusion — complaining of his lack of relevant expertise, his "background," and his purported grudge against the Biden family — but ultimately relented. Ziegler gave a deposition, which remains sealed, but he never testified publicly in the case. Hunter Biden and Roberts ultimately reached a settlement on child support.

More relevant to the just-launched impeachment inquiry is Hunter Biden's business career, a subject that has been of great interest to Ziegler. Hunter Biden has denied wrongdoing in his financial dealings, and there has been no publicly available evidence connecting his father to criminal behavior.

Federal prosecutors spent more than four years investigating the president's son, reaching a deal in June for him to plead guilty to two minor tax crimes and admit to the facts of a gun offense. After that deal fell apart, the prosecutor investigating the case was named a special counsel, and he recently obtained an indictment against Hunter Biden on the gun charges, suggesting the case may go to trial.

Beyond the president's son, Ziegler's broader messaging often conveys a far-right worldview that derides certain groups.

He promotes posts of inflammatory memes and conspiracy theories. He has shared rhetoric saying that Christians are better than others and that White people have been particularly persecuted. He has promoted photoshopped images of women he dislikes in compromising positions with Hunter Biden.

Before working in the Trump administration, Ziegler had few ties to politics. Aside from his cousin Ron Ziegler, who was press secretary for President Richard M. Nixon, his family mostly worked in agriculture and insurance, he told his hometown newspaper in Illinois in 2018. He graduated from St. Louis University in 2018 with a degree in economics before moving to Washington. He and his wife, Allie, have since moved back to Illinois, where he portrays himself on social media as a devout Lutheran and family man.

In the White House, Ziegler worked for Navarro, one of Trump's most outspoken advisers, who was recently convicted of contempt of Congress after he declined to cooperate with the House committee investigation into the Jan. 6 attack. In his White House role, Ziegler wrote reports about Chinese tariffs (which he argued the U.S. should reciprocate), the covid-19 pandemic (which he argued was planned) and the 2020 election (which he argued was stolen).

Ziegler eventually came to the attention of the Jan. 6 committee, which questioned him about his role in a turbulent White House meeting shortly after the 2020 election that featured a confrontation between some Trump associates who were pushing the president to try to stay in power and a group of aides warning against it.

After being questioned by the committee in July 2022, Ziegler unleashed a 27-minute inflammatory tirade on his Telegram page calling the investigation discriminatory against White people and using sexist slurs to describe female ex-colleagues who cooperated with the committee.

"They see me as a young Christian who they can try to basically scare, right?" Ziegler said. Calling the probe "a Bolshevistic anti-White campaign," Ziegler added that he is "the least racist person that many of you have ever met, by the way."

He has accused several Biden allies of being Bolsheviks, prompting Jonathan Greenblatt, the chief executive of the Anti-Defamation League, to note that such words are "often used as a code for Jews." Ziegler rejected any criticism from the group, saying that any ADL position is "probably a good indication of what I believe to be the exact opposite case."

Ziegler also has posted, on his Telegram page, photos of his targets' daughters wearing bathing suits or partying with friends, sometimes ridiculing the girls' appearances. In other posts he has shared with his following, women are mocked for being bad drivers or purportedly being biologically unfit for military combat.

Ziegler said his attacks on the women are legitimate, even if they are private citizens, because their public photos are "degenerate." He said he does not agree with every post he shares with his followers; he was joking when he forwarded memes about women's driving skills, he said, but he does not believe women should serve on the military front lines.

Ziegler has also shared posts by white supremacist Nick Fuentes and claimed there is a "war on Whites." Liberal activist David Brock, whose group Facts First USA has tracked Ziegler's online comments, said he has warned lawmakers, journalists and others about Ziegler's rhetoric, urging them to keep their distance. "He doesn't belong within 100 miles of Congress or a courtroom," Brock said in an interview.

Ziegler said he does not agree with all of Fuentes's views, but he does believe that White people are unfairly persecuted, citing government efforts to seek a more diverse workforce. He is a "Christian and a nationalist," he said, but not a Christian nationalist.

House Republicans are ramping up their efforts to investigate Hunter Biden, culminating in an instruction by House Speaker Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) to House committees on Sept. 12 to open an impeachment inquiry into President Biden centered on his son's business dealings, some of the same areas that Ziegler has probed.

Ziegler said he has made contacts within GOP congressional offices and given them copies of the report on Hunter Biden's laptop, though he declined to name specific lawmakers.

Some members of Congress, however, have publicly mentioned the report. Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) said in an interview with NBC's Chuck Todd that "you ought to read the Marco Polo report where they detail all kinds of potential crimes." (Todd responded that citing "potential" crimes is "innuendo.") Rep. James Comer (R-Ky.) told Newsmax the "positive thing" about the report is its inclusion of banking records.

"The response has been obviously grateful" from Republicans receiving the report, Ziegler said. He added: "Sometimes they've had an aversion to hearing me out — and then once they looked at our work or site … ," trailing off.

At one recent congressional hearing, after Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene (R-Ga.) displayed what appeared to be nude photos of Hunter Biden, Democrats noted that she had displayed the photos in the same order and with similar redactions as in the Marco Polo report. Greene's office did not respond when asked if the photos came from Ziegler or his nonprofit, but he suggested they did.

"Some of our screenshots in the report were utilized," Ziegler said in the interview. "So I've been somewhat pleased."

the first time the UAW has gone on strike against all three of America's biggest automakers at once.

The strike comes as unemployment in the United States is at historic lows, but fallout from the pandemic and higher inflation have boosted worker anxiety.

Companies have continued to post profits and increase executive pay, and the autoworkers are among a broad resurgence in union activity in the United States as workers from nurses to Hollywood script writers and actors seek better pay and job security.

Although the UAW strike affects only a handful of plants, Fain said the union was prepared to do "whatever we have to do" and expand work stoppages.

"If we don't get better offers and we don't get down to taking care of the members' needs, we're going to amp this thing up even more," Fain said.

'Record profits'

Fain's comments tempered any hope generated by the Saturday negotiations of a swift resolution.

The union is asking for a 36 percent raise over four years, a four-day workweek, defined-benefit pensions and company-financed health care in retirement. The automakers have countered that their offers to the union are among the best in history, but that they can't meet all their demands while still remaining profitable.

A spokesperson for Stellantis said the company would resume bargaining with UAW on Monday. Spokespeople for Ford and GM did not return requests for comment.

"It's all of our hope that it will end sooner rather than later. But record profits have been generated," said House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries (N.Y.), who was traveling to Detroit on Sunday. "It's only fair that everyone share in those record profits in the prosperity that has been created."

Over the weekend, workers gathered on picket lines at the plants where UAW had kicked off the strike. Spirits were high as supporters brought supplies and honked their car horns in solidarity.

"We want to become middle class again," said Andrew Hudson, a striking production worker outside Ford's assembly plant in Wayne, Mich., where the company makes Ranger trucks and Bronco SUVs. A few weeks ago, Hudson reached Ford's top pay rate, $32 an hour, but it took him six years to get there. He's on strike mostly because he doesn't want his newer colleagues to have to wait that many years to get the top pay like he had to, he said.

"We can't experience the American Dream that so many autoworkers before us, like my grandfather, got to," said Hudson, whose grandfather was able to own a house and two cars while putting his kids through college on an autoworker's salary. By contrast, Hudson said he and his co-workers are "struggling" to do the same on their own salaries.

Nicholas Harvey, 33, a single father who works in material handling, said he was on strike for higher pay.

At $24.85 an hour, he said he had to move back in with his parents after his split with his wife. "This used to be a coveted job," he said. "But I'm paycheck to paycheck. I want to own a house, put money away for [my kids'] college, but it's hard saving."

Battleground states

Meanwhile, the specter of the presidential election hovered over the strike, as politicians from both parties weighed in. President Biden and former president Donald Trump, the leading front-runner in the Republican contest, have taken contrasting approaches, with Biden saying the automakers should match their "record corporate profits" with "record contracts" for workers and Trump criticizing the UAW president. Biden said Friday he was sending two of his senior advisers to offer help in getting a deal done.

The Midwest states where auto plants are traditionally concentrated, including Michigan, are expected to be key battlegrounds in the 2024 election. But Rep. Debbie Dingell (D-Mich.) cautioned on Sunday that politicians should keep their distance. "I do not believe that the president should intervene or be at the negotiating table," Dingell told CBS.

For his part, Fain has said another Trump presidency would be a "disaster," but he has held off from endorsing Biden, saying the president must earn his self-styled moniker of the "the most pro-union president" in history.

Trump and other Republicans have criticized Democrats for pushing the country toward electric vehicles, many of which are not built in the United States. Democrats have said the companies need to consider their workers while pushing the transition to more climate-friendly cars. Chinese companies like BYD currently dominate the global electric vehicle market, and even U.S. companies like Tesla order their batteries, the key component of an electric car, from foreign manufacturers.

"Anyone that doesn't believe global warming is happening isn't paying attention," Fain said Sunday. "But this transition has to be a just transition. As it stands right now, the workers are being left behind."

The Big Three automakers have been ramping up their design and production of electric vehicles as Americans' interest in buying the cars continues to grow. But a major strike could get in the way of that transition, and the traditional automakers' ability to catch up to foreign competitors and electric-only producers like Tesla, said Dan Ives, an analyst with Wedbush Securities.

"A long and nasty strike … would be an absolute debacle for the Detroit Three," Ives said. Any delay in ramping up their electric vehicle production will stand to benefit Tesla, which has been facing increasing competition from the traditional automakers, he added.

To Solve Healthcare Delivery in the U.S., We First Need to Solve the Cookie Problem

Healthcare delivery in this country is a mess. Yes, we have some of the best doctors, researchers, and medical institutions in the world. But our system spends an exorbitant amount of money for inferior outcomes.

We can all agree that is simply wrong.

Opinions start to diverge, though, when we try to identify the underlying cause of that healthcare mess. Some argue we have a data or technology problem. Others insist the problem is reimbursement. Still others point to communication barriers between clinical specialties. To make matters worse, too often we try to solve all of these issues at once, proposing complex policy or infrastructure overhauls that often have no hope of moving the ball forward.

It is time to stop the cycle of ping-ponging from one large systemic overhaul to the next. There is no question data, technology, communication, and reimbursement initiatives need to be part of the answer, but none of them is sufficient to solve the uniquely human aspects of our healthcare challenges. We won't start seeing real change until we start addressing what I like to think of as the cookie problem.

Let me tell you about one of our patients: a 75-year-old man suffering from obesity, diabetes, and advanced kidney disease. When two of our dietitians and social workers started working with him, they encountered a constant stream of resistance. "I don't want to change my diet," they heard. "Diets don't work." "The foods I eat make me happy."

It was clear that this gentleman was not yet ready to engage with the kind of nutritional information and guidance that could help him take control of his health and improve his quality of life. But they didn't push; they took the time to really get to know this man as a person first and a patient second. They talked about his wants, his needs, his fears, and his motivations. Over countless conversations, they started to form the bonds of trust fundamental to a constructive patient-caregiver relationship. Gradually, it paid off. The patient began to take the lead in his own care, identifying small changes he could make to improve his health and raise his quality of life.

This included addressing his cookie problem.

Every night, he would wake up around 1 a.m., go to his kitchen, and eat four chocolate chip cookies and drink a large glass of milk—not exactly a kidney-friendly diet.

Despite his acknowledgment that this nightly ritual was remarkably unhealthy, the patient fervently wanted to hold on to it because it was part of how he defined who he was as a person. It was part of the regular rhythm of his life. But over many weeks of allowing the patient to drive the conversation, his care team was thrilled to hear him make a concession: he came to the tentative conclusion that he could eat only two cookies and half a glass of milk without meaningfully impacting his quality of life.

The result after three months? His blood pressure improved. His acid reflux diminished. And he reduced his hemoglobin A1C.

Most importantly, those changes showed him that he could take the driver's seat on his way to a better, healthier life. He began to work with his care team and nephrologist more often—setting more health goals, tracking his progress, and making himself accountable. He has even made it down to one cookie—not perfect, but progress, nonetheless.

Our company has developed remarkable predictive analytics that help us find kidney disease before it has been diagnosed and determine the risk for disease progression and hospitalizations.

We have a specialty-focused EHR that better aligns workflows and alerts our partner physicians to timely interventions. A network of 1,700 nephrologists has joined our mission to reimagine kidney care.

Yet all those great "solutions" don't solve the cookie problem.

What I have learned over a decade-plus in kidney care is that whiz-bang technology is not enough. Better care coordination and physician alignment are not enough. Talking to patients about their diet or medication is not enough.

We have to do all of it.

We have to create incentives to provide meaningful and insightful information to clinicians—human beings—at the point of care.

We need to arm them with the information they need to engage patients, and give them and their patients the time and space necessary to plot a course forward. And yes, that may mean we need to stop fixating on overly broad initiatives as a Band-Aid for the multifaceted issues plaguing our system. One size truly does not fit all.

An excellent large-scale example of this approach is the Advancing American Kidney Health Initiative, championed by former HHS Secretary Alex Azar, now a board member of our company. This program engaged all kidney community stakeholders in an effort to gain detailed insights into the specific barriers and opportunities for kidney patients across the full spectrum of healthcare delivery including data, access, communication, reimbursement, and more. All of this information was used to build new, specialized models that enable providers to deliver the individualized and very personal healthcare that can help solve each patient's own cookie problem.

Moving forward, we can use the concept of the cookie problem to help guide us toward public policies that affect small, manageable changes that benefit patients and providers. These small wins, over time, add up to create a large impact for Americans.

Migrant influx strains New York, divides Democrats

In sharp comments, mayor says 'issue will destroy New York City'

TOP: New York Mayor Eric Adams attends a rally Aug. 31 calling for expedited federal work authorization for asylum seekers in New York, the only city in the country that has a right to shelter. The flow of migrants accelerated last year. ABOVE: Demonstrators on Aug. 28 protest the opening of a Staten Island shelter.

For more than a year, New York has grappled with an influx of migrants traveling to the city in search of safety and opportunity. More than 110,000 migrants have arrived since the spring of 2022, the city says. About 60,000 of them are currently housed in shelters.

Long a gateway for immigrants, New York has largely welcomed the new arrivals, many of whom are seeking asylum in the United States. But the continuing flow of migrants and the rising costs of sheltering them has become a thorny challenge for Mayor Eric Adams (D).

At a town hall this month, Adams made his sharpest comments yet on the crisis. "I don't see an ending to this," Adams said. "This issue will destroy New York City."

Here's what you need to know:

How did the crisis start?

The flow of migrants into the city began to accelerate last year. In the summer of 2022, Texas Gov. Greg Abbott (R) began sending busloads of people to New York and other Democratic-run cities as part of a campaign to condemn the Biden administration's border policies.

The migrants had been processed at the border and released pending the pursuit of their asylum claims. Many came from Venezuela, a country wracked by political and economic turmoil, and all had endured dangerous journeys north through Mexico.

This spring, the number of migrants entering New York began rising once again. While some still arrived on buses from Texas, others were finding their way to the city from other parts of the country by air or by road, drawn by the promise of housing and the hope of finding work. The newer arrivals include people from Venezuela and Ecuador but also West Africa and Russian-speaking countries, Adams said this month.

Why is New York in a unique situation?

Buses of migrants have also arrived in Washington, Denver, Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles, setting off a scramble to accommodate the influx. But New York is the only city in the country that has a right to shelter. Anyone who wants emergency housing receives it.

As migrants have flowed into New York — many without the support networks that characterized previous waves of immigrants — they have relied on the city for housing and basic needs. The total number of people in city shelters has risen from 50,000 in mid-2022 to 113,000, a record.

To answer the rising need, New York has opened more than 200 temporary shelters, including paying hotels to house migrants. The city has also created large emergency dormitories, repurposing a cruise ship terminal, a former naval air station and soccer fields, at times sparking local protests.

Adams has expressed frustration with the city's right to shelter, established through court orders starting in 1981, and has tried — unsuccessfully — to dilute it. Former Mayor Mike Bloomberg recently expressed his support for such efforts. The right to shelter was "never intended to be a blanket guarantee of housing for an unprecedented flow of refugees," he wrote.

The only other jurisdiction with a similar right to shelter is the state of Massachusetts, which guarantees housing to families (but not individuals). It, too, is experiencing an influx.

How much is this costing the city?

In his remarks earlier this month, Adams painted a dire picture of the effect of the crisis, warning that the burgeoning costs of the migrant influx would necessitate spending cuts that would impact "every service in this city."

While New York is facing a potential $13.8 billion budget gap in the next fiscal year, less than half of the shortfall can be attributed to the estimated cost of caring for migrants, according to the Citizens Budget Commission. The rest is because of projected spending on new programs and contractual obligations, the commission said.

Still, the burden is considerable. New York spends an average of $383 a day per migrant family, Adams said last month. The city said it spent $1.45 billion on migrant services in the fiscal year that ended in June and estimates it will spend more than $3.6 billion in the current fiscal year. The city is getting help from New York State, which is providing more than $1.5 billion for shelter, health care and legal aid to the migrants. The federal government has contributed a further $145 million to the effort, the state says.

How has Adams responded to the influx?

Adams has grown increasingly vocal in his criticism of the Biden administration, accusing it of abandoning the city as it grapples with a crisis that cannot be resolved without federal help. The White House has said it is committed to helping New York, but also called on Congress to increase funding and overhaul the nation's immigration system.

Adams and New York Gov. Kathy Hochul (D) have implored the federal government to expedite the ability of migrants to work legally so they can support themselves. People seeking asylum must first submit their application, then wait nearly six months before they can ask for work authorization.

Hochul said last week that she was exploring the possibility of legislation to provide state-issued work permits for asylum seekers, effectively seeking a way around federal immigration law. The validity of such a measure would be challenged in court.

While Adams has pleaded for more help from the federal government, he has also asked other communities in New York State to take in migrants. His moves to send migrants elsewhere, often with little warning, provoked a firestorm. Dozens of counties across the state, many run by Republican officials, declared states of emergency to prevent migrant arrivals.

Why is the crisis provoking tensions among Democrats?

The handling of the crisis has led to finger-pointing among Democrats. Adams frequently takes aim at the Biden administration but has also complained about Hochul not doing enough. Last month, the state government shot back in a letter that blasted city officials for failing to act in a timely, coordinated way. Meanwhile, the Department of Homeland Security told the city last month that it had found structural and operational issues in New York's response.

Republicans have been quick to seize on the tensions to further their attacks on the Biden administration's border policies. "Mayor Adams is right: New York City deserves better," said House Speaker Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) in a statement this month.

Some Democrats fear that Adams's critiques could buttress Republican messaging on immigration, undermining President Biden's reelection campaign. They're also concerned about how the rhetoric will affect congressional contests in crucial swing districts in New York State that Democrats are intent on winning back in 2024.

Meanwhile, aid groups and immigrant advocates reacted strongly to Adams's recent comment that migrant arrivals could "destroy" the city. Such remarks are "reckless and unproductive fear-mongering," said the Legal Aid Society and the Coalition for the Homeless in a joint statement. "This dangerous rhetoric is something you'd expect from fringe politicians on the far right of the political spectrum."

Navy chaplain finds little relief over stillborn son

argued that Lejeune's hospital — which helps serve nearly 46,000 active-duty service members and their families on a military base with the country's greatest concentration of Marines — "met the standard of care" and that it handled her case without "any negligent act or omission."

Two days later, Petitfrere returned to the hospital. This time, she was spotting — she'd found blood in her underwear. She was still having contractions, and now, medical records show, her cervix was rapidly shortening, a sign of preterm labor. But the hospital treated her like a "nuisance," she alleged in her claim, and said she and her baby were fine.

She wasn't, though.

By the next morning, on Dec. 20, 2018, Petitfrere was writhing in pain. She couldn't stand or put on her uniform to go to work. She and her husband, Louis Petitfrere, at the time a fellow Navy chaplain, knew she needed medical attention right away. But she refused to go back to Lejeune. Instead, they raced to a nearby civilian hospital, where she couldn't answer intake questions because she was screaming.

Three hours later, Petitfrere delivered a stillborn son. She and Louis had chosen a name for him when they'd first learned they were having a boy: Primas. He weighed less than a pound — 277 grams — and was 9½ inches long.

The stillbirth was devastating, Petitfrere said in an interview, crying often as she recounted its impact on her and Louis.

They'd met at officer development school in 2016. He was a pastor from Southern California. She'd spent time in Africa as a missionary and worked as a chaplain resident at Sentara Norfolk General Hospital in Virginia.

When Petitfrere first considered joining the Navy, she was worried the change of stations and possible deployments overseas might hinder her chances of having a family. She'd lost her mother to suicide before her third birthday, and her father, who served in the Army, was often deployed, so his parents and sister helped raise her. She'd been praying for a husband and children her entire life and knew she would feel incomplete without them.

She was reassured by the Navy recruiter who had found her résumé online. "He said, 'You're going to be married and have a child before you leave your first duty station,'" Petitfrere recalled. "I looked at him with my mouth open. I knew the Lord was speaking through him."

In 2018, when she and Louis were both assigned to Camp Lejeune, they got married and rented a four-bedroom with plenty of room for all the children they wanted to have together. Primas was going to have brothers and sisters.

Now, two dozen or so of their friends and relatives gathered at a Jacksonville funeral home for their baby's memorial service. Petitfrere knew the red-brick building with white shutters well because she'd presided over services for veterans there. Inside, lullabies played on the speakers. A friend sang a gospel song. Another delivered a eulogy that Louis said gave them comfort in their anguish over the son whose name in Latin means "first" and whom he so badly wanted to call by the nickname, "Prime."

Right after the service, Petitfrere told a friend that she wanted to sue the military hospital for medical malpractice.

But her friend, a Navy nurse, shocked her by telling her she couldn't, Petitfrere recalled. A decades-old Supreme Court decision bars service members from suing the U.S. government for any injuries or harm they suffer that arise from their military service, regardless of whether it occurred in a combat zone or on a training mission or during medical treatment at a base hospital.

"Losing a child is painful regardless of the circumstances," Petitfrere said, "but losing a child in the manner in which I lost mine — begging for help, being disregarded, sent away, made to feel as if it was all in my head, and being physically handled roughly by people who were supposed to help me — has eroded my general sense of safety. I went through a deep depression after losing my son. The grief of losing him was compounded by the horror I felt when I realized that I was surrounded by people who could help me, but they just refused to. That is not a feeling I will forget."

She grieved Primas even as she gave birth to a daughter, became a chaplain at Marine Corps Base Quantico in Virginia, and got pregnant for a third time. In late 2020, when she was a few months away from delivering a second daughter, she heard about a new law designed to help service members like her: The Sgt. First Class Richard Stayskal Military Medical Accountability Act. Named after a Green Beret whose military hospital failed to recognize his lung cancer, the law allows troops to file claims within the Defense Department that allege medical malpractice by military health-care providers.

"This was a divine thing," Petitfrere said.

A new system 'sabotaged'

In December 2020, Petitfrere filed a malpractice claim under the Stayskal Act, seeking $5 million in damages for the medical care she received at Lejeune.

It was not a lawsuit. The Supreme Court ruled unanimously in 1950 that the government could not be held liable "for injuries to servicemen where the injuries arise out of or are in the course of activity incident to service." The decision, known as the "Feres doctrine," was named after one of the men involved in the lawsuits examined by the court. After Army officer Rudolph Feres was killed in a barracks fire in northern New York, his widow had sued the U.S. government.

In its ruling against Feres's widow and the others, the court pointed to the availability of veterans benefits to pay for injuries suffered on the job and said if Congress had wanted to give service members the right to sue, it would have laid out in the law whether financial judgments would replace or supplement those benefits. Four years later, the court reaffirmed its ruling, saying that allowing soldiers to sue for negligence would weaken the military's ability to maintain discipline.

Over the years, the "Feres doctrine" has faced harsh criticism, including from a near-majority of Supreme Court justices in 1987. In a case involving a Coast Guard pilot whose helicopter crashed into the side of a mountain on the Hawaiian island of Molokai, the late Justice Antonin Scalia, joined by three other members of the court, wrote a dissenting opinion that declared Feres "clearly wrong" and cited its "unfairness and irrationality." But five justices voted to uphold it, ruling that permitting such lawsuits would interfere with military discipline.

For service members and their relatives, the impact of Feres has been sweeping, shutting down lawsuits alleging sexual assaults, exposure to radiation, even being given LSD by military researchers without consent.

In 2019, federal lawmakers tried to carve out one exception to the doctrine: giving soldiers, sailors and airmen a chance to sue for improper medical care. Then-congresswoman Jackie Speier (D-Calif.) introduced the Stayskal Act, which would have allowed service members to file lawsuits alleging malpractice at nearly 700 military treatment facilities around the world, except for those in combat zones.

But the proposal ran into opposition from the Pentagon, which believed malpractice lawsuits would hamper medical decision-making and military readiness, and, from at least one prominent member of Congress, Sen. Lindsey O. Graham (R-S.C.), who thought the bill would expose the Defense Department to too many lawsuits.

So a compromise was reached: When the Stayskal Act was added to the 2020 National Defense Authorization Act, the final version only permitted service members to file administrative claims with the Defense Department — not lawsuits in federal court.

Still, Petitfrere hoped the new process would allow her to prove that Lejeune was responsible for Primas's death.

"I thought that the Navy would want erring service members to be held accountable so that the larger body of their servicemen and women would have access to good medical care," said Petitfrere, now 40, and the deputy command chaplain at Quantico.

Her claim alleged that Lejeune provided medical attention that was "grossly beneath the standard of care and cost Primas Petitfrere his life and forever altered the Petitfrere family."

Lejeune's staff minimized her discomfort, she contended in the claim, because she was "yet another Black woman experiencing fibroids." At one point, a doctor Petitfrere said was Black asked her, according to her claim, "who told [her] it was a good idea to become pregnant if she had fibroids." And when she asked for stronger pain medication, Lejeune's staff said no, citing an opioid crisis in the military, even though she had no history of substance abuse. Eventually the hospital relented, and gave her acetaminophen intravenously, her claim said.

"If Mrs. Petitfrere were a pregnant White woman seeking critical medical attention at Naval Medical Center Camp Lejeune, one must wonder if somebody would have listened to her cries for help," her claim stated. "If she were a pregnant White woman pleading for assistance, she would not have been accused of seeking to abuse drugs or been asked why she thought it was a good idea to get pregnant in the first place. If Mrs. Petitfrere had been a pregnant White woman who went to the Naval Medical Center Camp Lejeune's emergency room, her son may still be alive today."

The hospital referred questions from The Post about Petitfrere's allegations to the Defense Health Agency, which oversees the military's clinics, hospitals and medical centers. Peter Graves, the agency's chief of media relations, said it was "inappropriate" to discuss individual medical malpractice claims.

Black women often face skepticism or indifference when they seek medical care for pain or other problems during their pregnancies, according to a new study by the United Nations on Black maternal mortality around the world. It found that African American women and teens in the United States were three times more likely to die while pregnant or in the six weeks after giving birth than White women in the country.

When she filed her claim, Petitfrere didn't realize the long odds she faced to win a settlement. The vast majority of service members or their loved ones who file Stayskal Act claims get rejected. And that included Stayskal himself, whose claim was denied earlier this year. He is appealing.

Just 17 out of 502 medical malpractice claims filed with the military's three major branches have yielded financial settlements as of mid-2023, according to the Army, Navy and Air Force. Another 134 have been denied. The rest are being reviewed, are under or eligible for appeal, or have been withdrawn. The claims have sought a total of $3.77 billion in damages, but only $3.95 million has been given out in the 17 settlements.

Mercedes Petitfrere holds an urn with Primas's ashes. Primas was stillborn in 2018.

The Pentagon could not provide a breakdown of the claims by hospital, and neither could spokespeople for the three major military branches. But, according to Natalie Khawam and Alan Ripka, lawyers whose firm represents Stayskal and at least 150 service members, they include allegations of malpractice at some of the military's largest and most prominent hospitals, including Walter Reed National Medical Military Center in Bethesda, Md.

"I was convinced that this was going to be a way of getting compensation to the service members and their families expeditiously, without the problems associated with lawsuits, which can go on forever," said Speier, who retired from Congress in January. "What's so painful is that the Stayskal Act was a huge win for our service members, but the administrative system that has been created has really sabotaged it."

Rep. Darrell Issa (R-Calif.) and several others in Congress agree that the new system isn't working. In June, they introduced the Healthcare Equality and Rights for Our Heroes Act, which would do the same thing the original version of the Stayskal Act was going to do — allow members of the armed forces to file lawsuits for injuries and deaths caused by improper medical care at military hospitals.

"Congressman Issa believes a good idea like this one — that meets a pressing need and has a clear legislative purpose — can gain widespread support and become law," his spokesman, Jonathan Wilcox, said. "He's not concerned about any of his colleagues or the Defense Department that might not yet agree."

The military still opposes allowing service members to file malpractice lawsuits, a Defense Department spokeswoman said. Graham, a retired Air Force lawyer and the ranking Republican of the Senate Judiciary Committee, declined an interview request through a spokeswoman.

For Petitfrere, trying to navigate the current system was daunting because it was so opaque. She didn't know which experts were examining her case, if they had conflicts of interest, or if they had the right qualifications. Nor did she know the identities of all of the military officials who would vote on her case. Unlike in a lawsuit, she wasn't privy to the government's evidence.

She hired a medical expert, James Wheeler, an OB/GYN in Houston who has a law degree and frequently testifies in medical malpractice cases. After examining her medical records, he wrote a detailed report submitted in October 2021 with a damning conclusion: "Due to the negligent healthcare provided Ms. Petitfrere at [Naval Medical Center Camp Lejeune] on 12/19/2018, she lost her first pregnancy to preterm labor and delivery."

Wheeler found that Lejeune's medical staff failed to recognize Petitfrere's risk factors for and symptoms of preterm labor. If the hospital had kept her under observation for the "standard" four to six hours — as Petitfrere desired, according to her claim — instead of sending her home, she probably would have been diagnosed with preterm labor and given proper treatment.

He noted that images taken at Lejeune on the day before her stillbirth showed the length of her cervix had shortened — in the span of three minutes — from 4.46 centimeters to 3.31 centimeters. A cervical length of less than 2.5 centimeters is linked to a greater risk of preterm birth for pregnancies between 16 and 24 weeks, according to the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

"The images are a hammer over the head — not a tap on the shoulder — indicating preterm labor," Wheeler told The Post in an interview.

Petitfrere's preterm labor, he concluded in his report, was probably caused by increased contractions, which were possibly aggravated by fibroids. He attributed her successful pregnancies following the stillbirth to injectable progesterone, a hormone that calms the uterus.

He cited a doctor, a registered nurse, and a certified nurse midwife at Lejeune for their "departures from standards of care."

Two months later, in December 2021, Kristina Schlieter, a tort claims attorney with the Navy's Office of the Judge Advocate General in Norfolk, emailed Petitfrere's lawyer, David Sheldon, saying that the military's expert reviewed Wheeler's report. The standard of care, she said, was met. A formal rejection letter of the malpractice claim, called an "initial determination," was en route.

When Sheldon asked to see the written opinion of the expert that the government consulted — and to depose that expert — Schlieter denied his request.

"Our investigations are done in expectation of litigation and are work product and privileged," Schlieter wrote him. "Consequently, you are not getting any opinions we have and are not deposing anyone."

Sheldon was stunned. The military, he said, appears to want two contradictory things: a law that bars service members from suing the military for medical malpractice — and the excuse not to share its expert reports out of fear of getting sued for medical malpractice.

When the Navy's denial letter was issued, on Jan. 24, 2022, it offered no explanation.

"The damages alleged did not result from any negligent act or omission on the part of an employee of the United States," Schlieter wrote. "Accordingly, your client's claim is denied."

Schlieter did not reply to a list of emailed questions from The Post. Instead, the questions were forwarded to Patricia Babb, a Navy spokeswoman, who said the Navy "does not comment on specific cases, due to privacy reasons."

In her letter, Schlieter said Petitfrere was welcome to appeal, the final step in the claims process. In April 2022, the Defense Department's Military Medical Malpractice Claims Appeals Board rejected her, too.

The letter, signed by the board's chair, Gregory Girard, contained no explanation. Nor was there a list of the people who examined and voted on Petitfrere's case.

Girard did not reply to an emailed list of questions. The appeals board, Graves said, is made up of Defense Department attorneys who are experienced in medical malpractice and who have not played a prior role in the claim that they evaluate. He added that the Pentagon in August 2022 amended its regulations and now requires "a meaningful" explanation "that includes the specific basis for the denial."

That change came too late for Petitfrere.

In June 2022, she took the unusual step of filing a lawsuit in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, asking a federal judge to vacate the military's initial denial of her claim and to send her case back to the Defense Health Agency for a new decision and potential appeals process.

Her lawsuit argued that the Defense Department's rejection of her claim was "cursory and boilerplate." In a separate motion, her lawyer called the system "an affront to what Congress intended when it changed the law so dramatically to allow for medical malpractice claims to be brought in such circumstances."

Last month, U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth dismissed her case. While he extended his sympathy to Petitfrere — for both "her anguish at the stillbirth and her frustration at medical personnel not taking her concerns seriously" — the judge said the law left him "powerless to second-guess" the Defense Department's decision.

Now, she's appealing Lamberth's ruling. She isn't done seeking accountability for Primas.

Giselle, Solomon, Mercedes, Farrah and Louis Petitfrere. All three children were delivered at civilian, not military, hospitals.

Pain and prayers

Petitfrere was screaming and crying for help when she and Louis arrived at Onslow Memorial Hospital at 8:13 a.m. on Dec. 20, 2018. Her cervix was six centimeters dilated and completely thinned. The fetal membranes encasing her baby were bulging. Soon, they ruptured, depriving him of protection from the uterus's forceful contractions.

At 10:59 a.m., a doctor delivered Primas.

"I thought if they left the baby on my chest," Petitfrere said, "he would come back to life."

She'd known that her age alone put her at higher risk during any pregnancy. A fertility assessment she'd taken earlier that year indicated that she had fibroids, but the medical staff, she said, told her that their size and location should not thwart her chances of getting pregnant.

She also understood that fibroids might complicate her pregnancy. Over the years, she had come across articles showing that Black women suffer from fibroid pain more intensely than White women.

But Petitfrere had no trouble getting pregnant. On the day she'd tested positive, she slipped the pregnancy stick under Louis's pillow before they went to sleep. When he found the pink-and-white object under his head, he stared in awe at the double lines.

"Everyone was elated," Louis said.

The day after the stillbirth, a Lejeune staffer called Petitfrere, who "expressed concern about the care she received" at Lejeune, and "concern about her concerns being taken seriously," according to her medical records.

But the staffer also wrote in her notes that Petitfrere had stated "that she is aware that her miscarriage could not have been prevented" — an assertion that Petitfrere vigorously disputes.

"They wrote that to protect themselves," Petitfrere declared. "What I said was, 'I understand that sometimes you can't prevent a child from dying, but you can do all that you can do to prevent it from happening.' "

When they got home from Onslow, she and Louis cried and prayed. Their marriage, both said in interviews, grew stronger. She was granted a month of work leave.

A Bible verse, Jeremiah 29:11, brought them comfort when a trusted friend wrote it in a letter, dated on the day of Primas's death: "For I know the plans I have for you," declares the Lord, "plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future."

"We were grieving our son, and trying unsuccessfully to conceive again, and grieving the fact that we did not know if I would ever be able to conceive again or carry a baby to term," she said, "It was such a painful time. But that letter marked a turning point in our grief. We did not know if the Lord's goodness would ever look like more children for us, but we did know the Lord was good and that we could trust Him, and so we did."

'Four children, not three'

Nowadays, Petitfrere shuttles between her job at Marine Corps Base Quantico and her home in Spotsylvania, Va. As deputy command chaplain, she presides over funerals, Sunday services, and retirement and promotion ceremonies.

When she and Louis relocated from North Carolina, they chose to live 50 miles away from the nearest military base, a distance that allowed her to seek medical care at closer civilian, instead of military, hospitals. Her three children born since Primas's death were all delivered at Mary Washington Healthcare hospitals: Giselle, 3, Farrah, 2, and Solomon, nine months.

But every day, she and Louis grieve for Primas. Petitfrere is so traumatized by her treatment at Lejeune that she has considered leaving the military, fearing she'll have to deploy and won't have the flexibility to see civilian physicians for herself or her three children.

"I have loved the ministry with Marines and sailors. But there was no accountability. Nothing. Not even a proper, 'I'm sorry.' They won't say that because that would admit guilt," Petitfrere said.

"It's one thing to be in the military and you put your safety at risk from an enemy force in a war, but not from the people you work for who are supposed to protect you. I also could have died — and they would have let me. It's very hard as a chaplain to represent an organization that I do not trust.

"I should have four children, not three."

Petitfrere and Louis keep a purple box on a shelf next to her side of the bed. Inside is the positive pink and white pregnancy test. Black and white ultrasounds of Primas. His tiny footprints taken on a white card. A small red urn, engraved with a silver flower. And a card that reads, "Happy Birthday Primas."

"I am grateful I was able to hold you and touch your little body," Louis wrote on the card's left side. "I loved kissing you through mommy's belly and speaking to you."

"You are our first son. Happy birthday my love," Petitfrere wrote on the right side. "We will see you again. Mommy loves you dearly. Speak to the Lord on our behalf, we need it."

Ukrainian oligarch under pressure in criminal cases

He once was one of Ukraine's most flamboyant billionaires. Now, Ihor Kolomoisky is accused of stealing assets from the top-tier bank he had owned.

BY DAVID L. STERN

KYIV — Ihor Kolomoisky once owned Ukraine's richest bank, a TV station that carried a popular show starring a comedian named Volodymyr Zelensky, and fielded a private militia to defend his home city of Dnipro when it was under threat from Russian-backed separatists in 2014.

Today, he sits behind bars, awaiting the outcome of two investigations and at risk of losing everything.

Ukrainian anti-corruption authorities have opened a series of cases against Kolomoisky in September — the most recent on Friday, as the Security Service of Ukraine, or SBU, said it was investigating him for allegedly embezzling some $160 million.

The news came to Kolomoisky as he sat in a pretrial detention center in Kyiv. This month, the SBU said in a statement that it was investigating him for fraud and laundering more than $14 million between 2013 and 2020. Though he has not yet been indicted, the Ukrainian legal system allows a suspect to be detained while an investigation proceeds.

Kolomoisky, who is believed to hold Israeli and Cypriot passports, has declined to post a $14 million bail, protesting that the case against him is illegal.

Since Russia's invasion in February 2022, Ukraine's oligarchs have seen their influence greatly curtailed, as officials have introduced laws aimed at diminishing their political and economic reach. Many of their assets have been expropriated in Russian-occupied territory or completely destroyed during the fighting.

But arguably no one has fallen as far as Kolomoisky, an oil, banking and media mogul who was once valued at $2 billion, and who was considered a close supporter with major influence on Zelensky, the comedian-turned-president. Zelensky starred in a number of shows on Kolomoisky's television channel, including as an unlikely president in "Servant of the People."

In 2019, Kolomoisky helped Zelensky win the real job, thwarting Petro Poroshenko's bid for a second term. Kolomoisky and Poroshenko, also an oligarch, had clashed fiercely.

Kolomoisky has been under legal pressure since 2016 when officials discovered some $5.5 billion missing from PrivatBank's balance sheet, which they accused Kolomoisky, his business partner, Hennadiy Boholiubov, and other top deputies of embezzling.

The apparent asset stripping at the country's largest retail bank left some 20 million ordinary citizens at risk of losing their life's savings. The government seized the bank and nationalized it, then launched legal cases to claw back the allegedly stolen money.

Zelensky's election has not helped Kolomoisky and the perception that he is close to the president may have raised pressure on government authorities to hold the oligarch to account. In July 2022, officials in Kyiv told Ukrainian media that Kolomoisky had been stripped of his Ukrainian citizenship for violating a law prohibiting dual nationality. Kolomoisky denied this happened.

Officials at the country's National Anti-Corruption Bureau, or NABU, also said this month that they were also opening an official investigation of a "former ultimate beneficial owner" at PrivatBank and five associates on suspicion of embezzling some $250 million. Ukrainian media identified the former owner as Kolomoisky.

Kolomoisky was once widely regarded to be untouchable legally, given his connections and immense wealth. He was also one of the more flamboyant tycoons to emerge from Ukraine's first cutthroat decades of independence: a large man, with a shock of wavy hair and a bushy beard, who earlier kept a shark aquarium in his offices.

But his days as a larger-than-life billionaire operating above the law may now be drawing to a close.

"I consider this the end of his era," said Borys Filatov, the mayor of Dnipro, a former business partner and political ally of Kolomoisky, who has since fallen out with him.

When the first case against Kolomoisky for fraud and money laundering was announced, the SBU posted photos on its Telegram channel showing him surrounded by agents at his home, signing documents.

Later that day, Kolomoisky appeared in a Kyiv court for his arraignment and was jailed for two months. Ukrainian media showed him in a blue track jacket and dark pants, being driven away to a pretrial detention center.

If convicted in the NABU case, Kolomoisky faces up to 12 years in prison, officials said.

Filatov, the Dnipro mayor, said that NABU investigators "worked very, very fruitfully for several years" on Kolomoisky's case. "And that's why I believe that, now after the accusations from NABU have been presented, he has gone to jail for a very long time," he said.

Kolomoisky has flatly denied all of the allegations.

In 2017, a London court ordered a worldwide freeze of some $2.5 billion of his and his partner Boholiubov's assets in connection with the PrivatBank case.

And starting in 2020, the U.S. Justice Department filed civil forfeiture cases against the two men over properties they owned in Florida, Texas and Ohio, which it said had been "acquired using funds misappropriated from PrivatBank."

Then in 2021, the United States imposed sanctions against Kolomoisky and members of his family under a U.S. law that allows penalizing foreign officials involved in human rights violations and corruption. Secretary of State Antony Blinken said Kolomoisky was "involved in corrupt acts that undermined rule of law and the Ukrainian public's faith in their government's democratic institutions and public processes" while serving as governor of Dnipropetrovsk region.

After Russia initially invaded Ukraine in 2014, acting president Oleksandr Turchynov appointed Kolomoisky as governor of his native Dnipropetrovsk region. It was then that Kolomoisky financed a private army to fight Russian-backed separatists and called Russian President Vladimir Putin a "schizophrenic of short stature."

Poroshenko dismissed him from the governor's post in 2015, after Kolomoisky clashed with Kyiv over Ukrnafta, a state-owned oil company in which Kolomoisky held a minority stake.

Following the nationalization of PrivatBank, Kolomoisky fled the country for his homes in Switzerland and Israel.

Kolomoisky denies that the bank's money was stolen and has filed dozens of lawsuits to win back control. However, in 2020, Ukraine's parliament passed a law forbidding the government from reversing nationalizations. And in July 2022, Ukraine's Supreme Court upheld the seizure of the bank.

Kolomoisky returned to Ukraine from Israel following Zelensky's election, only to see more of his businesses come under pressure. In November last year, Ukraine's government nationalized the assets of Ukrnafta and Ukrtatnafta, an oil refinery in which Kolomoisky and Boholiubov held controlling stakes, saying the companies were needed for the war effort.

In February, SBU agents searched Kolomoisky's home over accusations of tax evasion and that some $1 billion had been embezzled from the two companies.

Forbes Ukraine estimates his wealth has dropped to less than $900 million since Russia's February 2022 invasion. Although he has lost a large share of his assets, he still controls the 1+1 television channel. At one point, it was Ukraine's most popular, but its influence has greatly decreased as the government has severely restricted wartime broadcasts.

The cases against Kolomoisky have accelerated as Ukrainian officials pursue a high-profile anti-corruption campaign — and Zelensky looks to signal to Western partners providing billions in military and economic aid that he has zero tolerance for graft.

In recent months, authorities have cracked down on alleged corruption in the country's tax authority and military recruiting system, while the country's defense minister, Oleksii Reznikov, Sept. 4 amid allegations that his ministry overpaid for supplies, though Reznikov was not directly implicated.

In his regular evening address, following Kolomoisky's jailing, Zelensky did not speak directly about the case, but he thanked Ukrainian law enforcement officials "for their determination to bring every case stalled for decades to a just conclusion."

"There will be no more decades-long 'business as usual' for those who plundered Ukraine and put themselves above the law and any rules," Zelensky said. "The law must work. It is so. It will be so."

E.U. pledges action on migrant smuggling

European Union Commission President Ursula von der Leyen pledged the swift return of "irregular" migrants to their home countries and a crackdown on the "brutal business" of migrant smuggling Sunday during a visit with Italy's premier to a tiny fishing island overwhelmed with nearly 7,000 arrivals in a single day this week.

Tensions have spiked on the island of Lampedusa, which is closer to Tunisia than the Italian mainland, with residents expressing impatience with the constant flow of migrants trying to reach Europe from North Africa — not just this past week but for decades. Last week, the number of migrants briefly surpassed that of the island's residents, who have witnessed countless tragedies.

The Red Cross said 1,500 migrants remained in a center built to accommodate hundreds.

"We will decide who comes to the European Union, and under what circumstances. Not the smugglers," von der Leyen declared.

Italian Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni has pledged tougher measures and is calling for a naval blockade of North Africa to prevent migrants on smugglers' boats from departing.

Von der Leyen vowed to crack down on migrant smuggling and help Italy cope with the spike in arrivals. But the 10-point plan appeared to stop short of a naval blockade, at least a quick one. She instead offered support for "exploring options to expand existing naval missions in the Mediterranean, or to work on new ones."

The plan also includes speeding funds to Tunisia as part of a deal with the European Union to block departures in exchange for aid, helping Italy accelerate asylum requests and setting up humanitarian corridors in countries of origin to discourage illegal routes.

Kim Jong Un departs with musical send-off

North Korean leader Kim Jong Un concluded his trip to Russia on Sunday, boarding a specially equipped armored train to the fanfare of a military orchestra in the far-eastern city of Artyom, Russian state news outlet RIA Novosti reported.

Kim's visit has drawn attention in Washington and beyond over a possible arms deal between Moscow and Pyongyang, as Russia seeks artillery for its waning stockpiles amid the war in Ukraine.

In Russia, Kim viewed aviation equipment and missile systems in the city of Vladivostok, where he was met by Russian Defense Minister Sergei Shoigu, state media outlet Tass reported.

Over the weekend, Kim attended "The Sleeping Beauty" ballet on the Primorsky Stage of the Mariinsky Theatre. He also visited an aquarium, where he watched marine animals perform, Russian media reported. The governor of the Primorsky region, which borders China and North Korea, gave Kim five kamikaze drones, a reconnaissance drone and a bulletproof vest, Tass reported.

18-story building in Sudan's capital catches fire: An 18-story building in the center of Sudan's capital was engulfed in flames Sunday as fighting between the military and a rival paramilitary force enters its sixth month. The Greater Nile Petroleum Oil Company Tower, situated in the center of Khartoum, caught fire Sunday during clashes between the Sudanese army and the Rapid Support Forces, according to Sudanese media. It's unclear how the fire started or if anyone was killed. Online footage of the blaze showed clouds of dark smoke rising from the burned-out glass-paneled tower, one of the tallest buildings in the Sudanese capital.

Australian unions stop work at Chevron LNG plants: Union workers at Chevron's liquefied natural gas facilities in Western Australia held rolling 24-hour stoppages Saturday and Sunday, prolonging uncertainty over the global supply of fuel. Employees at the Wheatstone and Gorgon LNG facilities — which exported about 7 percent of global LNG supply last year — started ramping up strikes last week in a dispute that has roiled global energy markets. Decisions to continue the full-day strikes will be made daily, according to an official at one of the unions representing the workers.

Putin's military shuffle long in making from Putin on down could be trusted; or that their deaths were orchestrated by outside actors, in which case the Russian security services failed to protect them.

In any case, analysts say, the Wagner deaths and the dismissals and disappearances of regular Russian military commanders highlight how Putin lacks trust in his military leadership. Fearing betrayal, the Russian leader has prioritized loyalty over competence, and he has tolerated infighting that has degraded his war machine.

"The army has degenerated organizationally, intellectually and technically," said Pavel Luzin, an expert on the Russian military and a senior fellow at the Jamestown Foundation who is based in the United States.

Missing in action

Surovikin, who was widely credited with pulling overextended Russian forces back from an untenable position in Kherson and also with strengthening the formidable defenses that have so far held back Ukraine's counteroffensive, had disappeared from view after the Wagner rebellion in June, when he was apparently held for questioning.

Earlier this month, he surfaced in a photograph, geolocated to Moscow, wearing civilian clothes and sunglasses. Russian officials have said he is "resting" and has retained his rank, but he seems unlikely to reclaim a top post anytime soon.

In July, a few weeks after the Wagner mutiny, Maj. Gen. Ivan Popov, commander of the 58th Combined Arms Army, who led one of Russia's elite forces in Ukraine, was abruptly dismissed after criticizing leaders of the Defense Ministry. In an audio message, leaked after Popov's dismissal, he accused his superiors of "treacherously and vilely decapitating the army at the most difficult and tense moment."

Popov, who was broadly admired for his competence, was reassigned to Syria, drawing ire from many pro-war Russian bloggers.

One of them, Andrei Zhivov, wrote that Popov's reassignment would "significantly reduce the morale and combat effectiveness."

Another commander, former deputy defense minister Col. Gen. Mikhail Mizintsev, who was dismissed in April and then joined Wagner, has not been seen since the mutiny.

At its most dramatic, the internal fight has led regular Russian units and Wagner fighters to turn their guns on each other. Lt. Col. Roman Venevitin, who was commander of Russia's 72d Brigade, published a video accusing the mercenaries of kidnapping him and some of his soldiers. Wager had released a video of Venevitin being interrogated while in custody, in which he said he had ordered his soldiers to shoot at Wagner fighters. During the rebellion, Wagner fighters shot down several Russian military aircraft.

The possibility that the Kremlin or the Defense Ministry ordered an assassination of Prigozhin — a longtime ally of the president who was nicknamed "Putin's chef" because of the government catering contracts that made him rich — points to a deeper paranoia that has caused tumult in the military's top ranks since the start of the invasion.

Leonid Volkov, the longtime top political aide to jailed Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny, said that Putin has no choice but to keep Shoigu in charge because a more talented defense minister would pose a threat to the president — especially if he succeeded in turning the war in Russia's favor. A triumphant, celebrity military chief would pose a similar threat, potentially galvanizing pro-war nationalists who have rallied around the symbol Z painted on Russia's tanks, Volkov said.

"Shoigu is irreplaceable, and he's irreplaceable because he's very bad," Volkov wrote on the social media site X, formerly known as Twitter. "Changing Shoigu or someone even worse doesn't make sense for Putin (there are enough problems without that). And changing him for someone better and who will succeed is too dangerous."

Given the frustration and disappointment in how the war is going, Volkov added, "anyone who replaces Shoigu will automatically receive an unlimited advance of hope and trust rating. And if he is better than Shoigu and achieves something, he will be more popular than Putin, consolidating the whole Z public."

Repeated reshuffles

Since the beginning of Russia's invasion of Ukraine, at least 12 high-ranking military commanders have been removed from their positions. While it appears that some were removed for critical mistakes, others were fired after they criticized Russia's high command or complained about conditions on the front.

On July 17, Popov was transferred to Syria, following in the footsteps of other disgraced generals, such as Col. Gen. Andrei Serdyukov, Col. Gen. Alexander Chaiko and Lt. Gen. Sergei Kisel — all, according to media reports, transferred as punishment for early failures in the war.

Sergei Markov, a Kremlin-connected political consultant, said the removal of Popov showed continuing fissures in the army and a widespread dissatisfaction among top brass. "Of course this undermines morale," Markov wrote on the Telegram messaging platform.

In October 2022, Surovikin, who had led Russia's southern grouping of forces, was promoted to be the overall commander of Russian forces in Ukraine — a move that Prigozhin publicly applauded.

Under Surovikin's watch, Russian troops withdrew from the city of Kherson on the west side of the Dnieper River, where they had occupied the regional capital but held a tenuous position.

After that retreat, Surovikin oversaw a strengthening of Russia's defenses in Ukraine. Troops constructed three defensive belts with minefields and a web of trenches that have slowed Ukraine's counteroffensive. The defense line was dubbed the "Surovikin line" by analysts, and even Ukrainian officials have acknowledged its effectiveness.

But in January, Surovikin was nonetheless demoted and replaced by Gerasimov.

Following Prigozhin's mutiny, Surovikin was brought in for questioning by Russia's intelligence services. Mykhailo Podolyak, an adviser to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, told The Washington Post that Surovikin's dismissal indicated a "severe crisis" in Russia's strategic command.

Russian President Vladimir Putin, right, applauds Col. Gen. Sergei Surovikin at a 2017 ceremony for troops who fought in Syria. Surovikin was removed as head of Russia's air force last month.

"The disappearance of Surovikin directly indicates a temporary tactical victory for . . . Shoigu, as well as the continued presence of Putin's great fear," Podolyak said. "The Russian president categorically does not trust any of the real generals."

Luzin, the analyst, said Russia's system of rewarding military figures for loyalty over skill had long preceded the invasion.

"Many of them were 'favorites,' but that doesn't mean they were competent," Luzin said. "Any Russian general in the last 20 years is primarily a loyal bureaucrat, and they played by the rules of power. But don't confuse that with competence."

Prigozhin's mistake

No one drew more attention to the failures of the regular military than Prigozhin, who lambasted Shoigu and Gerasimov while touting his own Wagner fighters.

Prigozhin called Shoigu and Gerasimov "traitors" and blamed them for excess casualties.

Shoigu and Gerasimov sought to rein Prigozhin in and won Putin's backing for a plan that would have brought all of Wagner under the Defense Ministry's control. Prigozhin refused, and the standoff ultimately led him to launch the rebellion against them, which he called off only after Putin gave a speech making clear that he was sticking by the regular military command.

Analysts said Wagner's success in seizing Bakhmut was not enough to win Putin's support.

"We've seen time and again that the attributes that get you rewarded — if you're a high-ranking officer or even a low-ranking one — are obedience, even to unworkable orders," said Dara Massicot, an expert on the Russian military at the Rand Corp.

Mark Galeotti, a British analyst of Russia's security services, blamed Gerasimov, who he said was maneuvering to eliminate those he viewed as threats or potential successors.

"I get the sense that actually Gerasimov is taking advantage of this current new mood of sort of paranoia in the system to essentially move aside people who otherwise are threats to his position," Galeotti said. "It is clear that commanders who are more willing to stand up for their troops, or pose more of sort of a potential threat, are definitely not doing well."

Shoigu and Gerasimov may have won the battle with Prigozhin in part because Putin was persuaded that Ukraine's counteroffensive was failing and that Russia was still on track for overall victory. Analysts say that triumph is far from assured.

The infighting among the Russian leadership in itself will not lead to a defeat, analysts said.

"It's more that there is an accretional array of different dysfunctions, all of which slowly tracks down," Galeotti said. "If you cannot raise with your superior [that] there are some problems, it reduces the capacity of the military to learn."

One such issue that appears to be going unaddressed is the deteriorating morale among Russian forces on the front.

"Offering a difference of opinion will get you in trouble," Massicot said. "The effect of this is that we'll see more distortions coming up the chain of command to where those sitting in Moscow don't really have an appreciation for where the weak spots are on their front line."

Odds that 2023 will be Earth's hottest year nearly doubled, NOAA reports

BY SCOTT DANCE

After a record-hot stretch around the globe this summer, it appears all but certain: 2023 will surpass 2016 as Earth's warmest year on record.

Scientists at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration calculate that there's a 93.42 percent chance that 2023 will become the hottest year, according to a monthly climate report released Thursday. That percentage is nearly double what was estimated a month earlier (46.82 percent) and a whopping 86 percentage points higher than the beginning of the year projection (6.9 percent).

The calculation — with four months remaining in the year — underscores how dramatically observations of global air and ocean temperatures and ice extent have diverged from anything scientists have previously witnessed, or that they would have predicted at the start of the year.

Signs of unusual warmth began to appear in early spring, and the trend has not wavered since.

July was the planet's hottest single month on record, with possibly its most extreme sustained warmth in 125,000 years.

The three months from June through August were the globe's hottest in 174 years of record keeping, 0.43 degrees Fahrenheit (0.24 Celsius) above the previous record and 2.07 degrees (1.15 Celsius) above the 20th-century average for Northern Hemisphere summer, according to NOAA's National Centers for Environmental Information.

That affirms estimates European Union scientists released this month, declaring a record-warm summer "by a large margin."

Deke Arndt, the NOAA centers' director, shared the report on X (formerly known as Twitter) with an unusual declaration.

"I'm rarely stunned by our findings," he wrote. "Yesterday when the climate monitoring team briefed this, it took me five minutes just to process the magnitude."

A new global temperature record began to appear possible when the climate pattern El Niño emerged in June — but scientists thought it would come in 2024. El Niño is associated with warmer-than-normal surface waters in the eastern equatorial Pacific Ocean, and is known for heating up the planet and fueling extreme weather.

A strong El Niño pattern that formed in 2015 and lasted into 2016 helped push the planet to record average warmth in 2016. But this year's warming pattern has differed from the heat of 2016, said Robert Rohde, lead scientist for Berkeley Earth.

"Most of the time when you are building towards a new record, the weather is warm from the very start," Rohde said in an email.

But this year, extreme temperatures did not emerge until June.

"That path towards record warmth is quite unusual," Rohde said.

Rohde and Berkeley Earth calculate there's greater than a 99 percent chance that 2023 will be the warmest, a huge leap since the beginning of the year, when they placed the odds at just 14 percent.

While El Niño may to some degree be responsible for the onset of this year's warming, oceans are record-hot far beyond the epicenter of the El Niño pattern in the Pacific.

Heat in the Atlantic basin caused disastrous bleaching of Florida coral reefs and has aided the rapid intensification of hurricanes. Around Antarctica, during Southern Hemisphere winter, sea ice cover reached a maximum far smaller than any scientists have observed before.

Arndt noted that while some might seek to dismiss new extremes in a record book that goes back 174 years as "a blip in geological time," he stressed they are nonetheless exceptional.

"Fact is, they are the most important, vital 174 yrs in the history of humanity's relationship with the Earth system, when almost everything we know about agriculture and infrastructure was found or refined," he wrote on X.

Ancient Jericho is added to U.N. World Heritage List

BY SARAH DADOUCH

A U.N. committee voted Sunday to recognize ruins near the West Bank city of Jericho as a World Heritage site, a move that drew backlash from Israel, which has clashed with the United Nations in the past over designations in the Palestinian territories.

The vote was held at a meeting of the World Heritage Committee, overseen by UNESCO, the U.N.'s cultural protection agency, in the Saudi capital, Riyadh. It added the prehistoric site of "Ancient Jericho/Tell es-Sultan (State of Palestine)," including a nearby spring, to UNESCO's World Heritage List, raising the number of inscribed Palestinian sites to four.

The area is in the occupied West Bank, which Israel seized along with Gaza and East Jerusalem in the 1967 war. Jericho is administered by the Palestinian Authority, which nominated the site.

"The natural resources and strategic location of Ancient Jericho/Tell es-Sultan made it . . . a major node of human development for millennia," the Palestinian Tourism and Antiquities Ministry wrote in an executive summary for the committee. "Today's residents drink water from the same springs and irrigate the same fields" as the dwellers of ancient Jericho.

The city is one of the world's oldest continually inhabited places, having attracted a permanent settlement as early as the 9th millennium B.C. Excavations there have unearthed traces of Neolithic populations and materials from the Early and Middle Bronze Ages.

But Israel, which has nine listed heritage sites, objected to the designation Sunday.

In a statement carried by Israeli media, the Foreign Ministry said the decision was "another sign of the Palestinians' cynical use of UNESCO" and their "politicization of the organization."

Israel quit UNESCO in 2019 after the agency described a shrine in the biblical city of Hebron as a Palestinian World Heritage site that was "in danger." The site, known as the Tomb of the Patriarchs, is located in Hebron's Old Town and dates to the 1st century A.D. It is important in Judaism, Christianity and Islam.

Israeli officials accused UNESCO of downplaying Jewish ties to the Holy Land. But Israel has remained a party to the World Heritage Convention, and it sent a delegation to the meeting in Riyadh on Sept. 10.

The delegation was led by the head of Israel's Antiquities Authority and was the first public visit by Israeli officials to Saudi Arabia.

The two countries are in talks to normalize relations, with the support of the United States.

Other Persian Gulf countries, including Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates, have established diplomatic ties with Israel. But Riyadh has stalled, insisting that Israel and the Palestinians first agree to a two-state solution.

UNESCO designations have long been complicated by politics and conflict. The agency's role is to identify, protect and preserve sites that are naturally or culturally significant. The selection process has come under fire in other places such as Syria and Kashmir.

In the Palestinian territories, UNESCO had previously designated three other sites: the Church of the Nativity and the Pilgrimage Route in Bethlehem; the Battir hill landscape of grapevines and olive trees; and the Old Town in Hebron.

Under Musk, X is giving more data to foreign countries' investigators

BY MAX HOPPENSTEDT

SAN FRANCISCO — Since Elon Musk bought Twitter last year, he has said he's on a crusade to make the platform stand for protecting free speech — as far as the law allows. He even went so far as to cost the company $350,000 in fines for delaying handing over former president Donald Trump's Twitter data in the investigation into the events leading up to the Jan. 6 attack.

On Friday, another court filing was unsealed showing prosecutors had accessed 32 direct messages from Trump's Twitter account.

But the balance between free speech and following the law is proving vastly more complicated in much of the rest of the world, where speech can be constrained by more restrictive laws. While Twitter, now known as X, has generally followed the law, in the past it touted its position on fighting back against overreaching government requests — particularly when it came to prosecuting speech online.

Now, in Germany, X under Musk's ownership is complying with requests to turn over more information about its users to prosecutors in online hate-crime investigations. The country has strict hate-speech laws forbidding certain defamation of politicians and promotion of white supremacy, and the company under Musk has turned over reams of user data to prosecutors to help identify those who break the law, according to three prosecutor offices who spoke with The Washington Post. As a result, hundreds of new cases are being pursued, they said.

In one recent case, prosecutors in the German state of Bavaria used data provided by X to identify a suspect who mocked Markus Söder, the leader of the conservative CSU party there, as "Södolf," a play on his last name and the first name of Adolf Hitler.

X shares data in 50 to 100 cases per month with Bavarian authorities, up significantly from before the acquisition, said Sebastian Murer, a spokesman for the Munich public prosecutors office overseeing hate-speech investigations.

Musk restored thousands of users previously banned for rule-breaking. Now, German prosecutors are going after the same types of accounts.

"Before Elon Musk, Twitter would regularly evaluate and eventually push back against government requests if they were a threat to dissidents or free speech," Yoel Roth, the former head of the company's trust and safety team, said in an interview. But that requires vast resources. "Compliance, on the other hand, is the easy option."

X did not respond to requests for comment.

Musk has previously said that people should be able to speak freely within the bounds of the law, in response to a question about what the platform could do to support citizens in countries like China and Iran.

But human rights advocates point to a concerning trend under Musk's ownership when it comes to cooperation with foreign governments. One report by international news site Rest of World that analyzed data from Harvard University's Lumen database — where X was still autoreporting takedowns — showed an uptick in the social media company's overall compliance with government requests for censorship and surveillance from November through April. Most of the cases were in Turkey, Germany and India.

Australia in August threatened to fine X over the surge in hate speech online. Germany threatened to fine the company over not removing illegal content on the site in April.

X's last public transparency report on government requests, published shortly before Musk's purchase, showed that the company had shared user data with German authorities in 285 cases in the second half of 2021. That went beyond just hate-speech user data requests, including those for terrorism or child sexual abuse investigations. The company turned down more than half of the requests.

Cologne public prosecutor Christoph Hebbecker said the uptick in X's compliance was particularly notable in hate speech, an area in which he's worked for years.

"Before Musk, we almost never got data for digital hate-crime cases. After the acquisition, we almost always did," Hebbecker told The Post.

In the United States, the First Amendment provides protections for most speech. That means that social media companies are generally left to make rules and police the sites for violative content themselves.

Under Musk, X has loosened the rules governing speech on the site and researchers have said that misinformation and hate speech have surged on the site under the new ownership. The Post found the site's "For you" timeline amplified hate speech, and recently a study by the European Commission showed that the network's new policies led to a spread of Russian propaganda and hate speech.

Musk tweeted in reply to a post on the study, "Where is all this pro-Russia propaganda? We don't see it."

And in court records unsealed in mid-August, X fought back against giving private messages to U.S. federal prosecutors in the criminal investigation into Trump's efforts to overturn the 2020 election results, albeit unsuccessfully, prompting a federal judge to question if Musk was just pushing back in that case to "cozy up with the former president." The judge criticized X for delaying special counsel Jack Smith's investigation and ordered the company to pay $350,000.

"It is frankly ludicrous seeing them going to great lengths to protect Donald Trump's data, but seemingly not vulnerable activists in authoritarian regimes, who rely on the platform to voice dissent," added Roth, the former executive. Roth criticized the recent developments as a "double standard."

German prosecutors in Frankfurt, Cologne and Munich — who are among the most active in that country investigating digital hate crimes — say it's unclear what exactly sparked the apparent increase in cooperation with their requests for user data. There is also more problematic content on the site overall.

Prosecutors typically request information like names, email addresses or IP addresses from the tech giants to help track down users.

The company has shed roughly 80 percent of its workforce since Musk acquired the company, prompting chaos and confusion as entire teams and departments were eliminated. X stopped publishing its semiannual transparency report on government requests after Musk took over.

"It's been quite painful. But I think, at the end of the day, it should have been done," Musk said of the layoffs during an April interview. "Were there many mistakes made along the way? Of course, you know. But all's well that ends well."

The scaled-down operations could be influencing the new tactics, said David Kaye, a professor at the University of California at Irvine and former United Nations special rapporteur on protecting freedom of opinion and expression.

"It certainly shows that the owners of these platforms have enormous power about what the cooperation with government does and does not look like," he said.

Following World War II, German lawmakers made it illegal to strongly incite hatred against minorities, to deny the Holocaust or to defame and slander elected officials in a way that might impact their ability to serve the public. Those regulations are meant as safeguards against any anti-democratic tendencies and often target neo-Nazis, who represent a rising threat in the country.

But those laws also became increasingly difficult to police in a world in which criminals could hide behind online identities that protected their hate crimes.

In 2017, Germany introduced an online hate law known as NetzDG, which requires companies to delete reported hate speech within 24 hours, generating controversy over further potential restrictions on speech. The European Union recently introduced a similar law that can result in high fines.

Prosecutors have cracked down on online hate after the murder of conservative politician Walter Lübcke by a neo-Nazi in 2019. The local politician in the German state of Hessen had become the subject of online attacks after a video of him defending the country's open policies on migration went viral. Later that year, a radicalized member of a niche neo-Nazi online forum shot two people as he tried to storm a synagogue in an eastern German city.

"We know that large amounts of concentrated online hate campaigns can be a threat to a democracy because we repeatedly hear from local politicians or activists who quit because of these attacks," said Josephine Ballon, who is part of Hate Aid, a German organization supporting victims of online harassment. "But these people are important to an open and vital public discourse."

Julia Bussweiler, a spokeswoman for the Frankfurt prosecutors office, said that X shared data in cases where posts were seen as calling for criminal behavior like attacking members of an ethnic minority or violating a law called "incitement to hatred" which is often used to prosecute people stirring up strong forms of hatred against refugees or minorities such as Muslims.

Prosecutors in Frankfurt in July filed charges against an X user who they say posted illegal forms of insult against German Minister of Health Karl Lauterbach based on data they received from X in May. The social Democrat minister, one of the most outspoken supporters of vaccines and masking during the covid pandemic in Germany, is regularly the target of online harassment.

Publicly, Musk called restrictions during the covid pandemic fascist in 2020 and just weeks after buying the site, it ended its ban on covid misinformation.

Still, Germany is democratic, Ballon said, something that starkly contrasts many countries seeking this type of data.

"I would hope that these networks can differentiate between places with robust rule of law like Germany and authoritarian governments," Ballon added.

X has loosened the rules governing speech on the platform since Elon Musk took over. Research finds hate speech has surged since.

Running gag: Judge considers new limits on what Trump can say publicly

BY DEVLIN BARRETT AND PERRY STEIN

Welcome back to The Trump Trials, our weekly effort to keep readers up to date on the many criminal cases the 45th president is fighting in federal and state courts. Okay, let's get into it.

What's ahead

In Washington, U.S. District Court Judge Tanya S. Chutkan is weighing a request by prosecutors to impose a limited gag order on Donald Trump to restrict what he can say about the case. The request comes amid growing concern by special counsel Jack Smith's team about the former president's often incendiary comments about the charges against him.

Prosecutors made the request about a week ago, but the court filing was only unsealed Friday, our colleague Rachel Weiner reports. They worry his comments could prejudice potential jurors or intimidate witnesses.

It's one thing to impose a gag order on a defendant; it's quite another to enforce one against someone like Trump: a candidate running for president. (We wrote previously about this possibility and peril). However Chutkan rules, the fighting on this front is likely to continue.

In Georgia, a hearing is scheduled on Monday for defendant Jeffrey Clark, a former Justice Department official, as he tries to get the charges filed against him by the Fulton County district attorney moved to federal court.

In New York, a hearing on Friday will set the stage for a civil — not criminal — lawsuit filed by the state attorney general alleging accounting misdeeds by Trump's business. That trial is scheduled to begin Oct. 2.

Highlights of last week:

1. Georgia: State case on 2020 election

The details: Trump faces 13 state charges, with prosecutors alleging that he tried to undo the election results in that state.

Planned trial date: Not yet scheduled.

Last week: Fulton County Superior Court Judge Scott McAfee, who has agreed to a speedy trial request by defendants Kenneth Chesebro and Sidney Powell, rejected an argument by District Attorney Fani Willis that Trump and the remaining co-defendants should be tried with them in late October.

McAfee said it was unrealistic to expect the others to be ready by Oct. 23. He signaled he might further break up what he called the "mega trial" into smaller groups, which Willis argued would create a "logistical quagmire."

The judge seemed to think the greater quagmire would be trying all 19 defendants at once, noting that the county simply didn't have a courtroom large enough.

However many trials there are, prosecutors have said, each one will have about 150 government witnesses and take roughly four months.

2. D.C.: Federal case on 2020 election

The details: Trump faces four federal charges for alleged efforts to overturn the results of the 2020 election.

Planned trial date: March 4

Last week: Before the prosecutors' request for a gag order on Trump was unsealed, Trump demanded Chutkan recuse herself from the case because, he claimed, she is unfairly biased.

In a filing, defense attorneys quoted Chutkan saying that two Jan. 6 defendants were there because of their loyalty to Trump. "It's a blind loyalty to one person who, by the way, remains free to this day," Chutkan said during one defendant's sentencing last year.

The odds of Chutkan recusing are low.

JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

Former president Donald Trump departs during the second half of a football game between Iowa State University and the University of Iowa on Sept. 9 at Jack Trice Stadium in Ames, Iowa.

It rarely happens because it's a high legal threshold — the Supreme Court has said that "only in the rarest of cases" can a judge be forced to recuse based on their opinions.

3. Florida: Federal classified-documents case

The details: Trump faces 40 federal charges over accusations that he kept top-secret government documents at Mar-a-Lago — his home and private club — and then thwarted government demands that he return them. Two Trump employees were also charged.

Planned trial date: May 20

Last week: U.S. District Judge Aileen M. Cannon issued rules that Trump and his defense attorneys must follow when reviewing the government's classified evidence during the discovery process.

The rules are fairly standard: Review the sensitive materials in a secure government facility, and don't talk about or share the information outside such facilities.

Trump's attorneys had asked Cannon to allow them to discuss — not review — the classified evidence at Mar-a-Lago. They argued that they could set up a secure facility on the property and this would be more convenient as they build Trump's defense.

But Cannon appeared to reject that request, spelling out procedures that are unlikely to allow the creation of a protected facility on the former president's property.

Waltine "Walt" Nauta, Trump's personal aide who was also charged in the case, had requested that he, too, be allowed to review the classified evidence. Unlike Trump, however, Nauta is not charged with retaining any sensitive government material. Cannon agreed with prosecutors that only Nauta's lawyers need access to the classified evidence — not Nauta himself.

4. New York: State business fraud case

The details: Trump faces 34 state charges in connection with hush money paid to adult-film actress Stormy Daniels during the 2016 campaign.

Planned trial date: March 24

Last week: There was supposed to be a scheduling hearing in this case, but Justice Juan Merchan decided against it, saying it could probably wait until next year.

Lawyers not involved in the Trump cases have suggested this trial might ultimately get delayed so that one or more of the federal cases against Trump can get to a jury in the first half of 2024. While Merchan hasn't moved the date, he doesn't appear determined to keep it.

Nerd Word of the Week

The nerd word of the week is ... protective order. In every criminal case, the government hands its evidence to defense attorneys so they can review it and craft their defense strategy. Judges frequently issue protective orders to make clear that a defendant and their lawyers cannot share that information with people not directly involved in the case, like, say, pesky reporters.

Question Time

Trump Trials readers sent us so many questions — good ones! — last week. We are making our way through them and will answer as many as we can. Keep 'em coming.

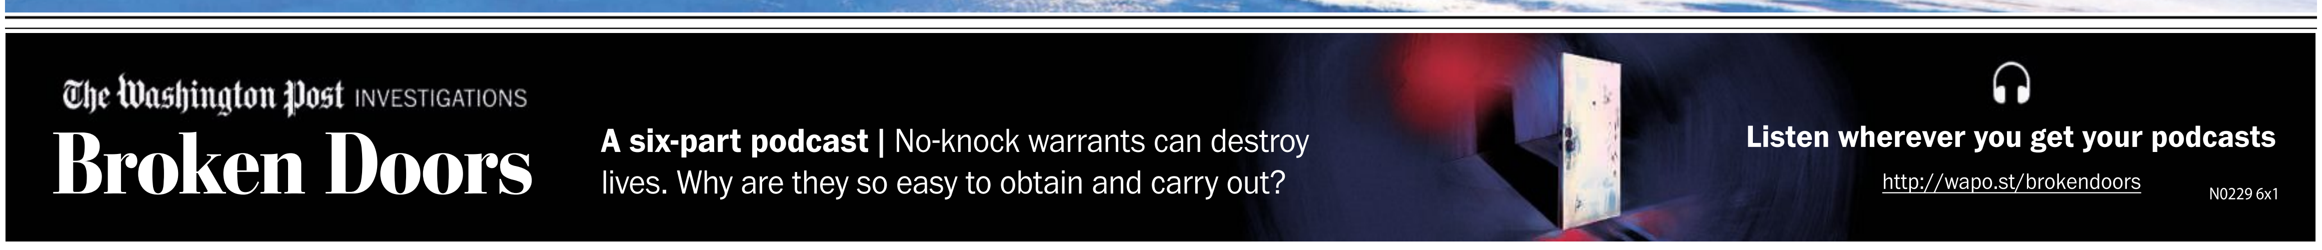

Can states invoke the 14th Amendment to keep Trump off the 2024 ballot?

The short, unsatisfying answer here is that legal scholars are debating this very question and we don't have a definitive answer. But it's important to note that Justice Department officials — who are handling the D.C. case that involves events that led to the Jan. 6, 2021, attack on the U.S. Capitol — have not made this argument.

To catch everyone up: The 14th Amendment contains a provision that blocks from public office anyone who has "engaged in insurrection or rebellion." Passed after the Civil War, it was intended to prevent traitorous former Confederates from regaining power. Now, groups in at least a dozen states have filed or explored filing lawsuits to block Trump from state ballots next year.

Our colleagues last week delved into these seemingly long-shot efforts, and we will keep reporting on them. But keep in mind that reporters can explain a lot of things, but one thing we can't do is predict the future.

Good news: A free iPhone 15! Bad news: It might still be a bad deal for you.

BY SHIRA OVIDE

America's three major wireless companies — AT&T, T-Mobile and Verizon — are offering customers a free or significantly discounted new iPhone 15 model when you trade in some types of older iPhones.

Yes, of course there's a catch.

Getting a "free" device sticks you with your phone provider for up to three years. You generally need to pay for a relatively high-priced unlimited data plan.

Taking those iPhone discounts is still a great choice for many people. But not for everyone.

I crunched the numbers from my cellphone bills and those of Geoffrey A. Fowler, The Washington Post's personal technology columnist.

Geoff would probably save money if he took advantage of an effectively free new iPhone 15 from his wireless provider, AT&T. I'm better off shunning iPhone discounts like that.

The difference is that Geoff has a typical service plan from a big three phone company. I, a weirdo, do not.

I'll walk you through the math for the two of us.

It's a starting point if you want to do the calculations for your household.

Even if you change nothing about your phone and mobile plan, it's worth considering the price of loyalty to your phone service.

The mobile service market in the United States is actually competitive, if you look beyond the big three wireless companies. Most people never do.

Send me your questions about the new iPhone 15 or the phone companies' iPhone 15 discounts to shira.ovide@washpost.com. I'll try to answer them.

Don't make Geoff's mistake

Geoff's family pays for an unlimited mobile data plan from AT&T but typically buys new iPhones from Apple.

Sorry, Geoff, this is the worst choice.

He's paying a relatively high monthly cost for phone service — about $62.50 per phone line before taxes, fees and an organizational discount but including an autopay discount. But Geoff is missing out on free (-ish) money from AT&T for a new iPhone.

(Read the "One Tiny Win" section below for details of the discounted iPhone 15 offers from AT&T, T-Mobile, Verizon and Apple. Rule of thumb: If you have an unlimited plan from the big three and are okay committing to it for a few years, the mobile providers' iPhone discounts are better than Apple's.)

I'm the polar opposite of Geoff. I would be worse off if I went with one of these cellphone providers' iPhone 15 deals.

I pay full price when I buy a new phone, but my phone bill from a small wireless provider called Google Fi averages about $31 a month before taxes and fees. (Yes, Google sells wireless service.)

I pay only for the amount of data I use on my phone, rather than a flat bill every month as Geoff pays.

It makes sense for me because I use relatively little data — about 0.5 GB last month compared with Geoff's 9 GB, which is fairly typical.

For me, it doesn't make sense to switch to a pricier unlimited data plan from a big wireless company — even if I got a free new smartphone.

Over three years, let's assume Geoff continues to pay $62.50 a month before taxes and fees for his mobile plan. He's taking AT&T's offer for a free iPhone 15 Pro for trading in his comparable two-year-old model.

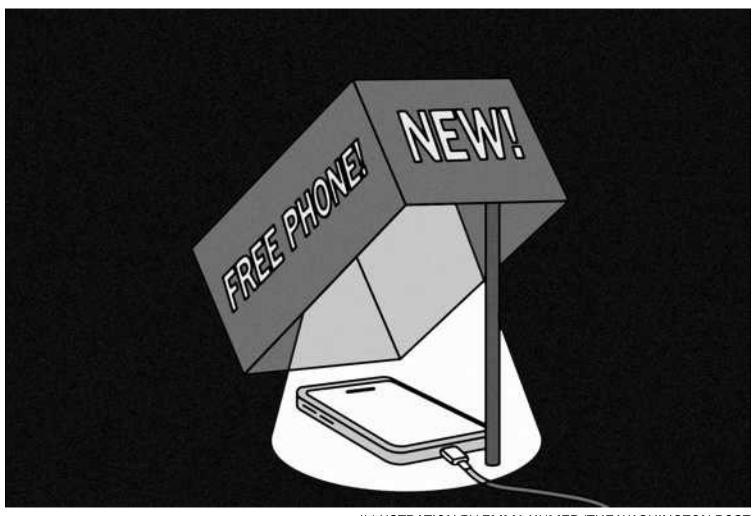

ILLUSTRATION BY EMMA KUMER/THE WASHINGTON POST

Let's say I buy a new iPhone 15 Pro on my own for $999 and sell an older model iPhone like Geoff's iPhone 13 Pro to a secondhand phone company or trade it in to Apple for about $480.

Over the next three years, I estimate my costs combining a new phone and monthly phone service work out to about $46 a month before taxes and fees.

I'm not going to buy a new phone for a while, which saves me even more money.

Looking beyond the big three wireless companies

These calculations show two things. First, there's no best wireless plan or phone deal for everyone.

It's a pain, but it's worth comparing all your mobile plan options, especially when you're considering buying a new phone. Consumer Reports has a guide to finding the right cellphone plan for your family.

Second, more people should consider cellphone providers other than AT&T, T-Mobile and Verizon.

Fewer than one out of every 100 customers of the big three phone companies switch their provider each month.

Partly, those free or discounted smartphones keep people from defecting. You lose a chunk of your discount if you quit before two or three years.

For many people, that lock-in is worth it.

But alternative wireless providers including Xfinity, Spectrum, Mint, Consumer Cellular, Boost Mobile and Google Fi use exactly the same mobile networks as Verizon, AT&T or T-Mobile but charge you less.

Unlimited plans can start as low as $30 a month per line or far less if you don't use much data like me.

Costs are lower partly because these alternative wireless companies don't typically give you extra goodies like free streaming services included in your phone plan. They may not have in-person stores. And they might not discount new phones much, if at all.

These alternative providers aren't the right choice for everyone, but they're definitely worth considering.

Geoff's family just ordered two free or nearly free new iPhone 15 Pro models from the phone company. He's happy.

I'm happy skipping those deals and sticking with my cheaper monthly bills and the freedom to buy a new (or used) phone and switch phone providers whenever I want.

To each his own.

One tiny win

How the big phone companies' discounts work: Typically, you need to trade in a relatively recent model of iPhone to qualify for a free or reduced cost iPhone 15 model from AT&T, T-Mobile or Verizon.

If you buy a new iPhone 15 model from Apple, the company's discounts from trading in an older iPhone aren't as generous as the phone companies'.

But this gives you more flexibility.

Credits on your bill: The phone company typically credits your service bill for some portion of the monthly equivalent value of the new iPhone over 36 months (AT&T and Verizon) or 24 months (T-Mobile).

You don't have to stick around that long. But if you quit early you typically must pay the portion of the phone for which you haven't yet received credits. You lose some of the original discount.

AT&T

Up to $1,000 off the iPhone 15 Pro or Pro Max models. Up to $830 off the iPhone 15 or 15 Plus.

If you have an eligible iPhone to trade in: The maximum discount on the iPhone 15 Pro and Pro Max may only apply if you trade in an iPhone 12 Pro Max or any iPhone 13 or iPhone 14 model. Models older than that have a lower trade-in value.

If you're buying an iPhone 15 or 15 Plus, the maximum discount applies if you trade in an iPhone 11 or newer.

And if your service plan is: one of the "Unlimited Your Way" plans.

AT&T has an offer to pay $15 to $20 a month over 36 months for a year-old iPhone 14 model. That's a hefty saving off the list price. You don't have to trade in an older phone but you need an eligible unlimited service plan.

T-Mobile

Up to $1,000 off any iPhone 15.

If you have an eligible phone to trade in: The maximum discount may only apply if you trade in a Pro or Pro Max iPhone 11 or newer. Other iPhone models have a lower trade-in value.

You can trade in some Android phones, too, directly with T-Mobile.

And if your service plan is: one of select Go5G phone plans. There are smaller device discounts available if you have other T-Mobile plans.

Verizon

Up to $830 off on iPhone 15 models for existing customers.

If you have an eligible phone to trade in: Verizon suggested people check on trade-in deals on its website starting today. It looked to me that maximum trade-in values applied to the five-year-old iPhone XS and newer models.

And if your service plan is: some unlimited or 5G plans for existing customers.

If you're a new customer or adding a line, it's up to $1,000 off an iPhone 15 model if you trade in any iPhone and have a higher-tier unlimited service plan.

Apple

Up to $650 off an iPhone 15 model.

If you have an eligible phone to trade in: Apple offers trade-in value for iPhone 7 models (up to $40) to last year's iPhone 14 Pro Max (up to $650).

None of this should persuade you to buy a new iPhone that you don't need.

The absolute best choice for your wallet and our planet is buying less new stuff. It's better to keep your existing phone as long as you can, repair or replace parts as needed and buy a used phone from a reliable seller.

California blazing ahead on tech regulation — again

The Technology 202

BY CRISTIANO LIMA

California legislators last week passed a flurry of proposals to regulate the tech industry, including bills to rein in data brokers' privacy practices and to allow consumers to tweak or fix their personal electronic devices, referred to as the "right to repair."

The bills are yet another signal of the state's aggressive moves to set its own tech regulations as policymakers in Washington struggle to pass any major laws.

The bills advanced ahead of the California legislature's final day on Thursday, typically a dizzying year-end sprint, and could soon be signed into law by Gov. Gavin Newsom (D).

California, home to many Silicon Valley giants, has repeatedly sped past other states in setting new internet regulations, including its landmark 2018 privacy law and measures expanding protections for children online and creating new transparency requirements for platforms last year.

And state lawmakers have already signaled they will press to pass more sweeping tech measures when they return next year. Here's a breakdown of the legislative frenzy:

Data broker limits

Both of the state's chambers greenlit the Delete Act, which would create a hub where Californians could order hundreds of data brokers to delete and stop collecting their information. The bill, S.B. 362, builds on protections in the California Consumer Privacy Act.

Hayley Tsukayama, associate director of legislative activism at the Electronic Frontier Foundation digital privacy group, wrote in August that the bill "gives us all a much-needed method to exercise our privacy rights" and "helps us gain better control over our data." (Tsukayama previously worked as a consumer technology reporter at The Washington Post.)

The 'right to repair'

State lawmakers last week passed the Right to Repair Act, S.B. 244, which would require companies to give consumers the tools to independently fix their products.

While California is not the first state to pass such legislation, the move marks a major win for the "right to repair" movement, which for years has battled against giants like iPhone maker Apple. The company last month surprised advocates by embracing such a bill for the first time.

"The era of manufacturers' repair monopolies is ending, as well it should be," iFixit CEO Kyle Wiens, whose e-commerce site has advocated for "right to repair" bills, said Tuesday.

Liability over child abuse material

California's State Assembly and Senate last week also passed A.B. 1394, which seeks to open tech companies up to liability if they knowingly "facilitate, aid, or abet" the spread of child abuse material, after failing to advance a separate measure to expose platforms to more lawsuits.

Tech industry groups have spoken out against the bill, which resembles the controversial federal sex trafficking law known as FOSTA-SESTA.

Jim Steyer, CEO of the children's advocacy group Common Sense Media, called its passage "a hugely important step to help stamp out the insidious and deeply harmful problem of online child sex trafficking."

AI, news bill on the horizon

State Sen. Scott Wiener (D), who has spearheaded net neutrality legislation in the state, last week unveiled a new bill to require safety testing for artificial intelligence tools. If taken up, the measure could put the state on another collision course with Washington, whose legislative leaders are increasingly showing interest in regulating the surging tools.

Assemblywoman Buffy Wicks (D-Oakland), who has led several major children's safety proposals, teed up for consideration next year her bill to require tech platforms to pay news publishers for their content. Tech giant Meta has threatened to block news content in the state if the measure passes the law, which would mark the first time that has happened in the United States.

How to wage the financial war against the Russian economy

The cat-and-mouse sanctions game could be decisive in bringing peace to Ukraine.

THE WAR in Ukraine is being waged on the battlefield but also globally, and the latter theater might be the more decisive. It is there, on the financial and commercial terrain where the West's sanctions have been deployed, that the effort to subvert Russia's economy might eventually do more to end the war than any new weapons system or fresh breakthrough along the roughly 600-mile front line.

As with hopes that Ukraine's summer counteroffensive would quickly smash the Russian defenses, predictions that the Kremlin would soon be brought to its knees by the West's sweeping sanctions have proved overly optimistic. So far, Russian troops dug in behind some of the world's densest minefields have been resilient. For the most part, so has Russia's economy, buffered by deep stores of natural resources.

In both cases, though, cracks in Moscow's defenses are showing and, especially in the case of the Russian economy, they are widening. Now, there are critical points where the United States and Europe can apply more pressure.

The most promising of those are in the energy sector — whose revenue accounts for a majority of the Kremlin's export earnings, and a sizable chunk of its federal budget and gross economic output.

In the months after Russian President Vladimir Putin unleashed his ruinous full-scale invasion last year, high crude oil prices provided a safety net for Russia's overall economy. This year, following an array of Western sanctions, its oil and gas revenue is estimated to have been cut roughly by half, costing Russia in the range of $150 billion.

Along with capital flight, the loss of revenue has caused a steady decline in the ruble, which has lost more than a third of its value against the dollar over the past year. The central bank has responded with sharp interest rate increases, intended to stabilize the currency. Ordinary Russians, whom the Kremlin has tried to shield from direct consequences arising from the war, are starting to feel the pinch.

Much of the squeeze on Moscow's energy exports has been applied by a price cap on Russian crude oil set by Washington and its European allies. The cap, imposed in December, works by requiring purchasers who still want to buy Russian oil to pay no more than $60 per barrel if they use cargo operators or insurers based in the European Union or other countries that have adopted the sanctions. That price is roughly a third lower than that of Brent crude, the world's leading oil benchmark.

Predictably, Russia has tried to evade the price cap, with increasing success. On average, the price of Russian oil has lately risen above the $60 cap, though it remains substantially below the Brent benchmark. The danger now is that Russia will start to recover some of its energy revenue, which would extend its ability to wage its illegal and bloody war.

A broad group of experts organized by Stanford University, including economists and energy specialists, has proposed what might be a workable blueprint for tightening the energy sanctions. The group's proposals include technical measures to stop Russia from using seaborne shipments of crude not subject to the cap — an unregulated "shadow fleet" of tankers that carries around a third of Russian seaborne oil. Perhaps the toughest measure to turn the screws on Russia would be to gradually lower the oil-price cap — eventually even by half.

That move has been pushed for months but resisted by some Western governments. The concern is that Russia might retaliate, possibly by slashing oil shipments or ending them completely, triggering a global energy crisis. Those fears are overblown.

For one thing, most economists estimate that Russia's production costs for crude oil are just a fraction of the $60-per-barrel price cap, perhaps $15 or less. That means the Kremlin would still be assured of a profit if the West and its allies lowered the cap, revenue it would be unlikely to forgo amid the array of other economic challenges it faces.

For another, an attempt by Russia to deliver a retaliatory oil shock might have the most devastating impact in countries of the Global South, to which it has turned for diplomatic support as the war has dragged on. Moscow would be unlikely to risk negating those efforts by slashing oil exports deeply, which would drive up energy prices in the very countries it has courted so assiduously.

What's more, Moscow would probably fail to achieve the desired effect were it to slash oil exports, much as its cutoff of gas exports to Europe in the months after last year's invasion failed to weaken the staunch antiwar stance adopted by nearly every country on the continent.

No sanctions regime is watertight. Western sanctions against Russia will inevitably involve a cat-and-mouse game of enforcement and evasion. Without doubt, however, the Russian economy has been diminished and is in a much more fragile condition today than if sanctions had not been imposed. And the longer the West keeps them up, the more painful the sanctions will be for Russia and ordinary Russians, whose flagging support for the war might force Mr. Putin to reassess his fantasy of imperial revival.

Common-sense ideas on abortion and parenthood

The issues mentioned in the Sept. 12 Tuesday Opinion essay by Marc A. Thiessen and Alyssa Rosenberg, "We disagree on abortion. Here's a pro-family agenda both parties can support.," need to be addressed, but the elephants in the room also need to be addressed.

The first is that free and easy access to birth control without a prescription is shown to be the most effective way of preventing abortions. The second elephant is that nothing addresses the fact that young children who are not old enough to use birth control and victims of rape and incest are not going to be prepared to prevent impregnation and should not be forced to carry a child and care for them. The final elephant is that health complications are a large part of the reason that women have abortions, especially late-term abortions, which are almost always because of medical concerns.

The solutions mentioned in the op-ed are exactly what many GOP lawmakers avoid because they call anything that helps women and children welfare or socialism. You can't be part of the problems and part of the solutions.

Janet D. Smith, Herndon

I was disappointed that the piece about the pro-family agenda by Marc A. Thiessen and Alyssa Rosenberg had a glaring omission: fathers. Anytime abortion is discussed, it is in terms of the women, their rights and the rights of the unborn.

Why is the burden always, always on the mothers?

Deborah De Haven, Leesburg

It is commendable that two people on opposite sides of the abortion issue could come to an agreement about steps that might reduce the number of abortions and, more important, aid families. But their focus appeared to be on getting both parents out to work outside the home and away from their children. There was no explicit statement or even a suggestion of any idea of enabling a family to have a full-time at-home parent.

A few suggestions: At-home parents should be able to accrue full Social Security credits at an income rate of 200 percent minimum wage or 66 percent of the outside-the-home working parent's income, whichever is greater. The at-home parent could be covered by Medicare, or any premium paid for a spouse's employer-provided health insurance could be covered by a tax refund. Governments could give work credits for stay-at-home parents, which might encourage private businesses to do so.

I would like to see a much broader discussion of enhancing family life than simply encouraging both parents to work outside the home.

C.H. Von Kerczek, Annapolis

Kudos to Marc A. Thiessen and Alyssa Rosenberg for championing common-sense solutions to the problems women face.

It is not that difficult to listen to women — from those who have had abortions to those who are struggling as pregnant women at work.

For the past 30 years, Feminists for Life has been on campuses and on Capitol Hill working to systematically eliminate the coercive reasons women feel driven to abortion, primarily a lack of resources and the support they need and deserve.

I have found from meetings at the American Civil Liberties Union and the Heritage Foundation, and from working behind the scenes with women's organizations, college administrators and pro-life groups, most people really want to help. Doing it together can move the agenda forward.

Dealing with rats

Regarding the Sept. 13 Style article "Washington is full of rats":

When the Rat Patrol rids Washington of these vermin, they should come to South Bethany, Del., where phenomenal construction of McMansions around my 1950-built beach shack has caused rats and mice to relocate as they seek shelter and warmth in my comfortable old surroundings away from bulldozers, work crews and edifices going up two or three stories.

I've had to hire exterminators for the first time in 50 years, and they all conclude that the old spring traps are still the best if you don't have D.C.'s Rat Patrol. What I wouldn't give for a Flavia, Jigs and some other Ratscallions to rid my area of these vermin, as well.

Kudos to D.C.'s own dogs, who are worth their weight in gold and all the positive publicity they are garnering. But their services are needed in other areas — even in tony, high-end beach communities that turn a blind eye to such an infestation and claim "there's no problem here."

Leslie L. Megyeri, Washington

Though the Sept. 13 Style article about rat-hunting dogs was written with notable spots of sensitivity, flicking through the paper and seeing such graphic photos of dogs killing rats would surely cause anybody who has had rats as pets much distress. I was moved to tears.

Yes, as the piece wisely pointed out, death by dog is kinder than glue traps or poison. But the relish from the dog owners and in many of the online reader comments showed anything but concern for kindness. Instead, we saw humanity's ability to cut off all compassion when it's convenient.

Rats are highly intelligent animals, just as sentient and sensitive as the dogs and cats so many of us love. What a shame for them that, after the pandemic eased, the restaurants reopened as careless as ever with the tons of callously wasted food. What a shame for all species on this planet, and the planet itself, that humans are the worst stewards imaginable.

Surely, we can do better.

We need to support teachers

Inaction on opioid addiction

I was frustrated but hardly surprised to read in the Sept. 13 front-page article "Pain pills plunge, but fatal overdoses surge" that between 2011 and 2019, the highest overdose death rates hit counties where opioid prescriptions per person were highest.

Though opioid-prescribing might be declining overall, that trend isn't true across our health-care system. During the same time frame as in the article, Medicare's share of nationwide opioid-prescribing increased by more than 70 percent and went up by 1 million prescriptions. Conversely, Medicaid prescribing decreased by 46 percent, and commercial prescribing went down 51 percent.

Our health-care system still acts as a gateway to opioid addiction for our nation's seniors. Opioid use disorder among those over 65 enrolled in traditional Medicare tripled from 2013 to 2018. We continue to prioritize opioids as a first-line therapy for this population, despite guidance from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that says non-opioid options are just as effective as opioids for acute pain. And they're safer.

Last year, Congress passed the Non-Opioids Prevent Addiction in the Nation Act to increase seniors' access to non-opioid options. But Medicare patients' access to non-opioid pain management options is delayed until 2025.

We're losing hundreds of Americans every day and spending nearly $1.5 trillion each year combating this crisis. There's no excuse for inaction. It's costing lives. We need to implement the NOPAIN Act now.

Mr. Romney's exit

Regarding the Sept. 14 front-page article "Romney, now a lonely voice in his party, calls it quits":

Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah) is the kind of public servant that has become rare in Congress. His belief that age would cause him to be less productive if elected to a second term stands in stark contrast to other members of Congress. I am a Democrat who voted for Barack Obama in 2012, but I did respect his opponent, Mr. Romney.

Given today's political climate, we can ill afford to lose politicians of his integrity.

John A. Viteritti, Laurel

When I was learning to play chess, I was introduced to the queen's "gambit." That is a chess tactic to sacrifice a piece (and mislead the opponent, at least in the early days of chess) and entrap (gambit, from the Italian "gambetto": tripping up) the opponent in a losing posture.

The announcement from Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah) that he does not intend to run for another term and his call for a "new generation of leaders" in lieu of the likely candidacies of President Biden and former president Donald Trump strike me as a similar tactic. Many in the Republican Party believe that if neither Mr. Biden nor Mr. Trump were running, a "new" Republican candidate would win against the presumed candidacy of Vice President Harris. It is disingenuous of Mr. Romney to say, "Frankly, it's time for a new generation of leaders. They're the ones that need to make the decisions that will shape the world they will be living in," as though that is a statement made for the public good. Mr. Romney, at age 76, has had no trouble making decisions that will shape the world in which a new generation will be living.

A foreign policy fiasco

Regarding the Sept. 14 front-page article "Kim vows support for Putin amid war":

While Americans are preoccupied with divisive domestic issues, the main failure of the Biden administration is being ignored. Under President Biden's tenure, we have seen unprecedented collaboration among the United States' enemies.

The inability of this president to prevent these hostile associations has left the United States more vulnerable than ever. Because of this critical foreign policy deficiency, it is difficult to envision the Biden administration's ability to contain the spread of nuclear, biological or chemical weapons.

Hostile countries are collaborating with each other to damage U.S. interests. China, Russia, North Korea, Iran and others are exploiting the lack of strong and serious American leadership.

Other countries have changed their names for more mundane or pragmatic reasons that have nothing to do with throwing off a colonialist yoke.

INDIA PRESS INFORMATION BUREAU/EPA-EFE/SHUTTERSTOCK

KEITH B. RICHBURG

India's name change wouldn't be a first

A country's name often is imbued with centuries of history and culture, and might embody the very identity of its people. Changing a name is a monumental step, usually with political overtones.

That's why heads were turning at the recent Group of 20 meeting in India, when Prime Minister Narendra Modi seemed to be not-so-subtly rebranding India by its Hindi and Sanskrit alternative name: Bharat.

At the summit, Modi sat behind a nameplate that identified the host country as Bharat. An earlier invitation to a banquet for visiting dignitaries was addressed from the "President of Bharat." And a booklet distributed to the G-20 guests was titled "Bharat: The Mother of Democracy."

The question began swirling: Was Modi setting the stage for an official change of name for the world's most populous country?

This would not be entirely surprising coming from Modi, whose political party is called the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) — Hindi for "Indian People's Party." Bharat and India have been the two officially recognized names of the country since independence from Great Britain, after a third proposed name, Hindustan, was jettisoned. Many Indians use the two names interchangeably when speaking in the several languages and dialects prevalent in the country, although India is the common name in English.

But any potential name change comes against the backdrop of rising Hindu nationalism at the expense of Muslims and other minorities stoked by Modi and the BJP since coming to power in 2014.

Engendering nationalist and anti-Western sentiment has often been a reason behind changing the names of countries — particularly those that were named through colonization. It's a handy device for leaders seeking to bolster their own legitimacy by appealing to anti-colonial sensibilities and instilling a sense of patriotism.

In Africa, for example, when a mid-ranking military officer named Joseph Mobutu seized power in a 1965 coup in the Democratic Republic of Congo, he launched a campaign for "authenticité," to remove vestiges of the country's Belgian colonial past. Citizens were ordered to change their European names to African ones — Mobutu became Mobutu Sese Seko Kuku Ngbendu wa za Banga, which means "the all-powerful warrior who, because of his endurance and inflexible will to win, goes from conquest to conquest, leaving fire in his wake." He also changed the country's name to the Republic of Zaire, derived from a Kongo-language description of the mighty Congo River.

Mobutu, who proved to be a ruthless and corrupt dictator, was overthrown by a rebel army in 1997, and the country's name was quickly restored to the Democratic Republic of Congo. To the victor go the naming rights.

Likewise, the military generals ruling Burma changed the country's name to Myanmar in 1989, as a way to try to legitimize their power grab a year after killing thousands of protesters in an anti-government uprising. For decades, the country had been known as Burma after the dominant ethnic group. The junta leaders said a name change was needed to break from the colonial past and be more inclusive to non-Burman ethnic minorities.

The United Nations now officially recognizes the country as Myanmar. The United States still uses the name Burma, because it does not recognize the legitimacy of the government that changed the name.

Swaziland's King Mswati III unilaterally changed his country's name to Eswatini in 2018, to mark its 50th anniversary of independence from Britain. The name Eswatini means "land of the Swazi people" in the Swazi language.

Other countries have changed their names for more mundane or pragmatic reasons that have nothing to do with throwing off a colonialist yoke.

The Republic of Macedonia became the Republic of North Macedonia in 2018 to end a decades-long dispute with Greece, which has a region with the same name — and was blocking the country's NATO membership until the name switch.

The Czech Republic had an even more practical reason for a name change. The name, inherited at the breakup of Czechoslovakia, was a mouthful, and no one knew what English shorthand to use for citizens. So it became Czechia.

But why would Modi be considering changing India to Bharat? And why now?

With the BRICS grouping of Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa set to expand and add, among other nations, Argentina and Egypt, perhaps Modi was hoping that switching to Bharat might reserve a place for India near the head of the alphabetical pecking order.

Besides appealing to his Hindu nationalist base, the prime minister also appears driven by a combination of pique and blatant political expediency before elections due by next May. More than two dozen opposition parties announced in July that they were joining forces to try to oust Modi's BJP at the polls. The new alliance calls itself the Indian National Developmental Inclusive Alliance. Its not-coincidentally-convenient acronym: INDIA.

Playing up the acronym, the opposition cast the coming elections as a test of "Modi versus INDIA." Modi responded by comparing the alliance to the 19th-century East India Tea Company, which was responsible for colonizing the country.

There's no telling where this global name-swapping might turn up next. Might the ayatollahs of Iran be tempted to restore the ancient name Persia, considering that it was the British-installed Reza Shah Pahlavi who changed it to Iran? Perhaps Chinese President Xi Jinping, an authoritarian who also likes to stoke nationalist sentiment, will insist on changing his country's name in English to Zhongguo, which is how the country is referred to in Mandarin.

Even if the name is formally changed, I suspect many around the world will always refer to Bharat as India, much like South Vietnamese (and some American boomers) still refer to Ho Chi Minh City as Saigon. Or in the way many Brits, including Hong Kong's last colonial governor, Chris Patten, still call the Chinese capital Peking. I, for one, still cannot use Ronald Reagan for our capital's favored airport — it will always be Washington National to me.

How a conservative court ruling could save Hunter Biden

Irony alert: A misguided ruling from the conservative-dominated Supreme Court — a decision that President Biden has said "contradicts both common sense and the Constitution" — might save Hunter Biden from the gun charges just filed against him.

Last year, in New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen, the court upended its approach to gun rights, saying that the Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms permits only those gun restrictions that have a basis in "history and tradition." That blinkered interpretation has set off a flurry of challenges to existing gun laws in the lower courts as judges have been forced to scour Colonial-era statutes for analogies to modern-day regulations.

In Hunter Biden's case, that means finding historical antecedents for the federal law that prohibits those who use illegal drugs from purchasing or possessing firearms. Biden was indicted Thursday on three felony counts: making two false statements on a gun purchase form that he did not use and was not addicted to controlled substances, and illegally possessing a Colt revolver while he was using narcotics.

His lawyers have signaled their intention to use the high court's ruling in Bruen as a basis for challenging the charges.

"Our response to the charge in court will point out that the United States Department of Justice, which is supposed to protect the constitutional rights of all Americans, by bringing its firearm charge, is disregarding the rulings of the Supreme Court and the Fifth Circuit and is seeking to punish Mr. Biden for exercising a constitutional right these courts have stated he has," Biden's attorney, Abbe Lowell, told me.

That presents yet another layer of political discomfort for the president, whose administration has defended the constitutionality of the ban on gun ownership by drug users and would, presumably, maintain that position in Hunter Biden's case as well.

This could also prove to be an instance of bad cases making bad law. First, the bad case: The counts on which Biden has been indicted are not often brought as stand-alone charges, absent other, serious misconduct.

'Throughout American history, laws have regulated the combination of guns and intoxicating substances. But at no point in the 18th or 19th century did the government disarm individuals who used drugs or alcohol at one time from possessing guns at another.'

— Judge Jerry E. Smith

Biden had the gun for all of 11 days and never used it. Under an earlier, now-unraveled plea agreement, prosecutors agreed to allow him to enter a pretrial diversion program — a deal that Biden's lawyers assert is still in force and that in any event seems like a more appropriate penalty for his behavior.

As to bad law: Whatever happened in Colonial times, modern-day America ought to be able to say that drug users shouldn't have guns. Yet Biden has a reasonable chance — in the chaotic aftermath of Bruen, and especially given this conservative Supreme Court — of prevailing in his argument that the addict-in-possession ban violates the Second Amendment.

He could also attack the false-statements charges on the theory that if the underlying law against addicts with guns violates the Second Amendment, a false statement about drug usage is no longer legally significant.

Most trial-level federal courts that have heard challenges to the law have upheld it. But the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, the first appeals court to consider the issue, ruled the other way last month involving a man who said he smoked marijuana about 14 days a month but was not deemed high at the time of he was arrested and charged with illegal gun possession. After Bruen, the court said, the law, in place since 1968, was no longer constitutional.

"Throughout American history, laws have regulated the combination of guns and intoxicating substances," wrote Judge Jerry E. Smith, a Ronald Reagan appointee. "But at no point in the 18th or 19th century did the government disarm individuals who used drugs or alcohol at one time from possessing guns at another."

The ruling looked to such statutes as a 1656 Virginia law that banned "shoot[ing] any gunns at drinkeing" — the worry was about conserving gunpowder or generating alarms about Indians attacking — and a 1771 New York law that barred citizens from firing guns over the New Year's holiday because of the "great Damages" done by those "intoxicated with Liquor."

"Given the prevalence of drinking at the Founding, that handful of laws puts the government on shaky footing," Smith observed. "The government has failed to identify any relevant tradition at the Founding of disarming ordinary citizens who consumed alcohol."

Notably, Smith was joined by not only Donald Trump nominee Don Willett but also Stephen A. Higginson, a Barack Obama nominee. In a concurring opinion, Higginson said that conclusion was compelled by the court's historical approach in Bruen but lamented the potential implications of prioritizing an individual's right to bear arms while ignoring that the right is grounded in the need to protect public safety.

Such rulings "will constrain the ability of our state and federal political branches to address gun violence across the country, which every day cuts short the lives of our citizens," he warned. "This state of affairs will be nothing less than a Second Amendment caricature, a right turned inside out, against freedom and security in our State."

Indeed. Is public safety threatened by a pothead with a gun? Not so much. By Hunter Biden with a handgun? He was probably more of a danger to himself, or so those closest to him figured, than to others.

But a society ought to have the discretion to make those judgments for itself. It shouldn't be constrained in its decision-making by the rules of an era of flintlocks and muzzleloaders, long before school shooters and lockdown drills, opioid epidemics and drug gangs.

Bidenomics can overcome McCarthy's messy House

If you were to prosecute U.S. politics for dysfunction, last week would be Exhibit A. Rarely has there been such a dramatic demonstration of what is defective in our public life.

On Tuesday, the Census Bureau released data showing that the rate of child poverty more than doubled to 12.4 percent in 2022, from a record low of 5.2 percent the previous year. Five million kids fell into poverty.

This wasn't the fault of parents. Congress did it by refusing to reauthorize the payments of up to $300 per child each month under President Biden's expanded child tax credit. The expiration of other benefits provided during the pandemic made things worse.

On the same day, House Speaker Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) had an important announcement to make. In a more humane world, he might have addressed this dramatic turnaround in the lives of children. You'd think that a party committed to rolling back abortion rights would want to demonstrate that its dedication to life extends to children after they are born.

But McCarthy had something else on his mind: impeaching Biden. More precisely, he announced a vague impeachment inquiry without providing any evidence of the "high crimes and misdemeanors" that are the Constitution's standard for such a momentous action. He offered little about how this inquiry would move forward.

Clearly, McCarthy hoped the impeachment sop would be a magic elixir for party unity. But it could not bring him even the temporary peace he needs with the 20 or so far-right members of his caucus who are eager to shut down the government and keep threatening to throw him out of his job. A frustrated McCarthy, The Post reported, resorted to the f-word at a House Republican Conference meeting on Thursday, daring his tormentors to try to remove him. But f-words don't get budgets passed.

There's good reason for rage at two levels: basic governance and vision.

Washington is a mess primarily because about 5 percent of House members on the far right insist on getting what they want despite what the voters decided in 2022. With a Democrat in the White House, voters gave the GOP a very thin majority in the House and Democrats a comparably slender majority in the Senate.

This means bold moves rightward or leftward are, for now, impossible. Biden accepted this in the deal he made with McCarthy in May to prevent a debt default. In the Senate, both Democrats and Republicans accepted the need for compromise on spending bills. Only the House, held hostage by radicals, seems prepared to blow everything up.

The larger failure is rooted in the lack of vision created by ideological blinders. Ironically, the surge in child poverty brought about by the expiration of the expanded child tax credit made clear that this was a government program that achieved exactly what it promised to do. We saw what life was like with it — and without it.

The same census report brought home government's capacity to do good with some positive news: Thanks to Obamacare and recent improvements in the program made under Biden, the share of Americans without health insurance dropped to 7.9 percent. In 2009, before Obamacare, 19.4 percent of Americans lacked health insurance for at least part of the year.

Sure, libertarians want to get government out of all sorts of activities. But most Americans, including most conservatives, are a long way from pure libertarianism. A significant portion of the spending that eased the economic impact of covid-19 was passed on a bipartisan basis.

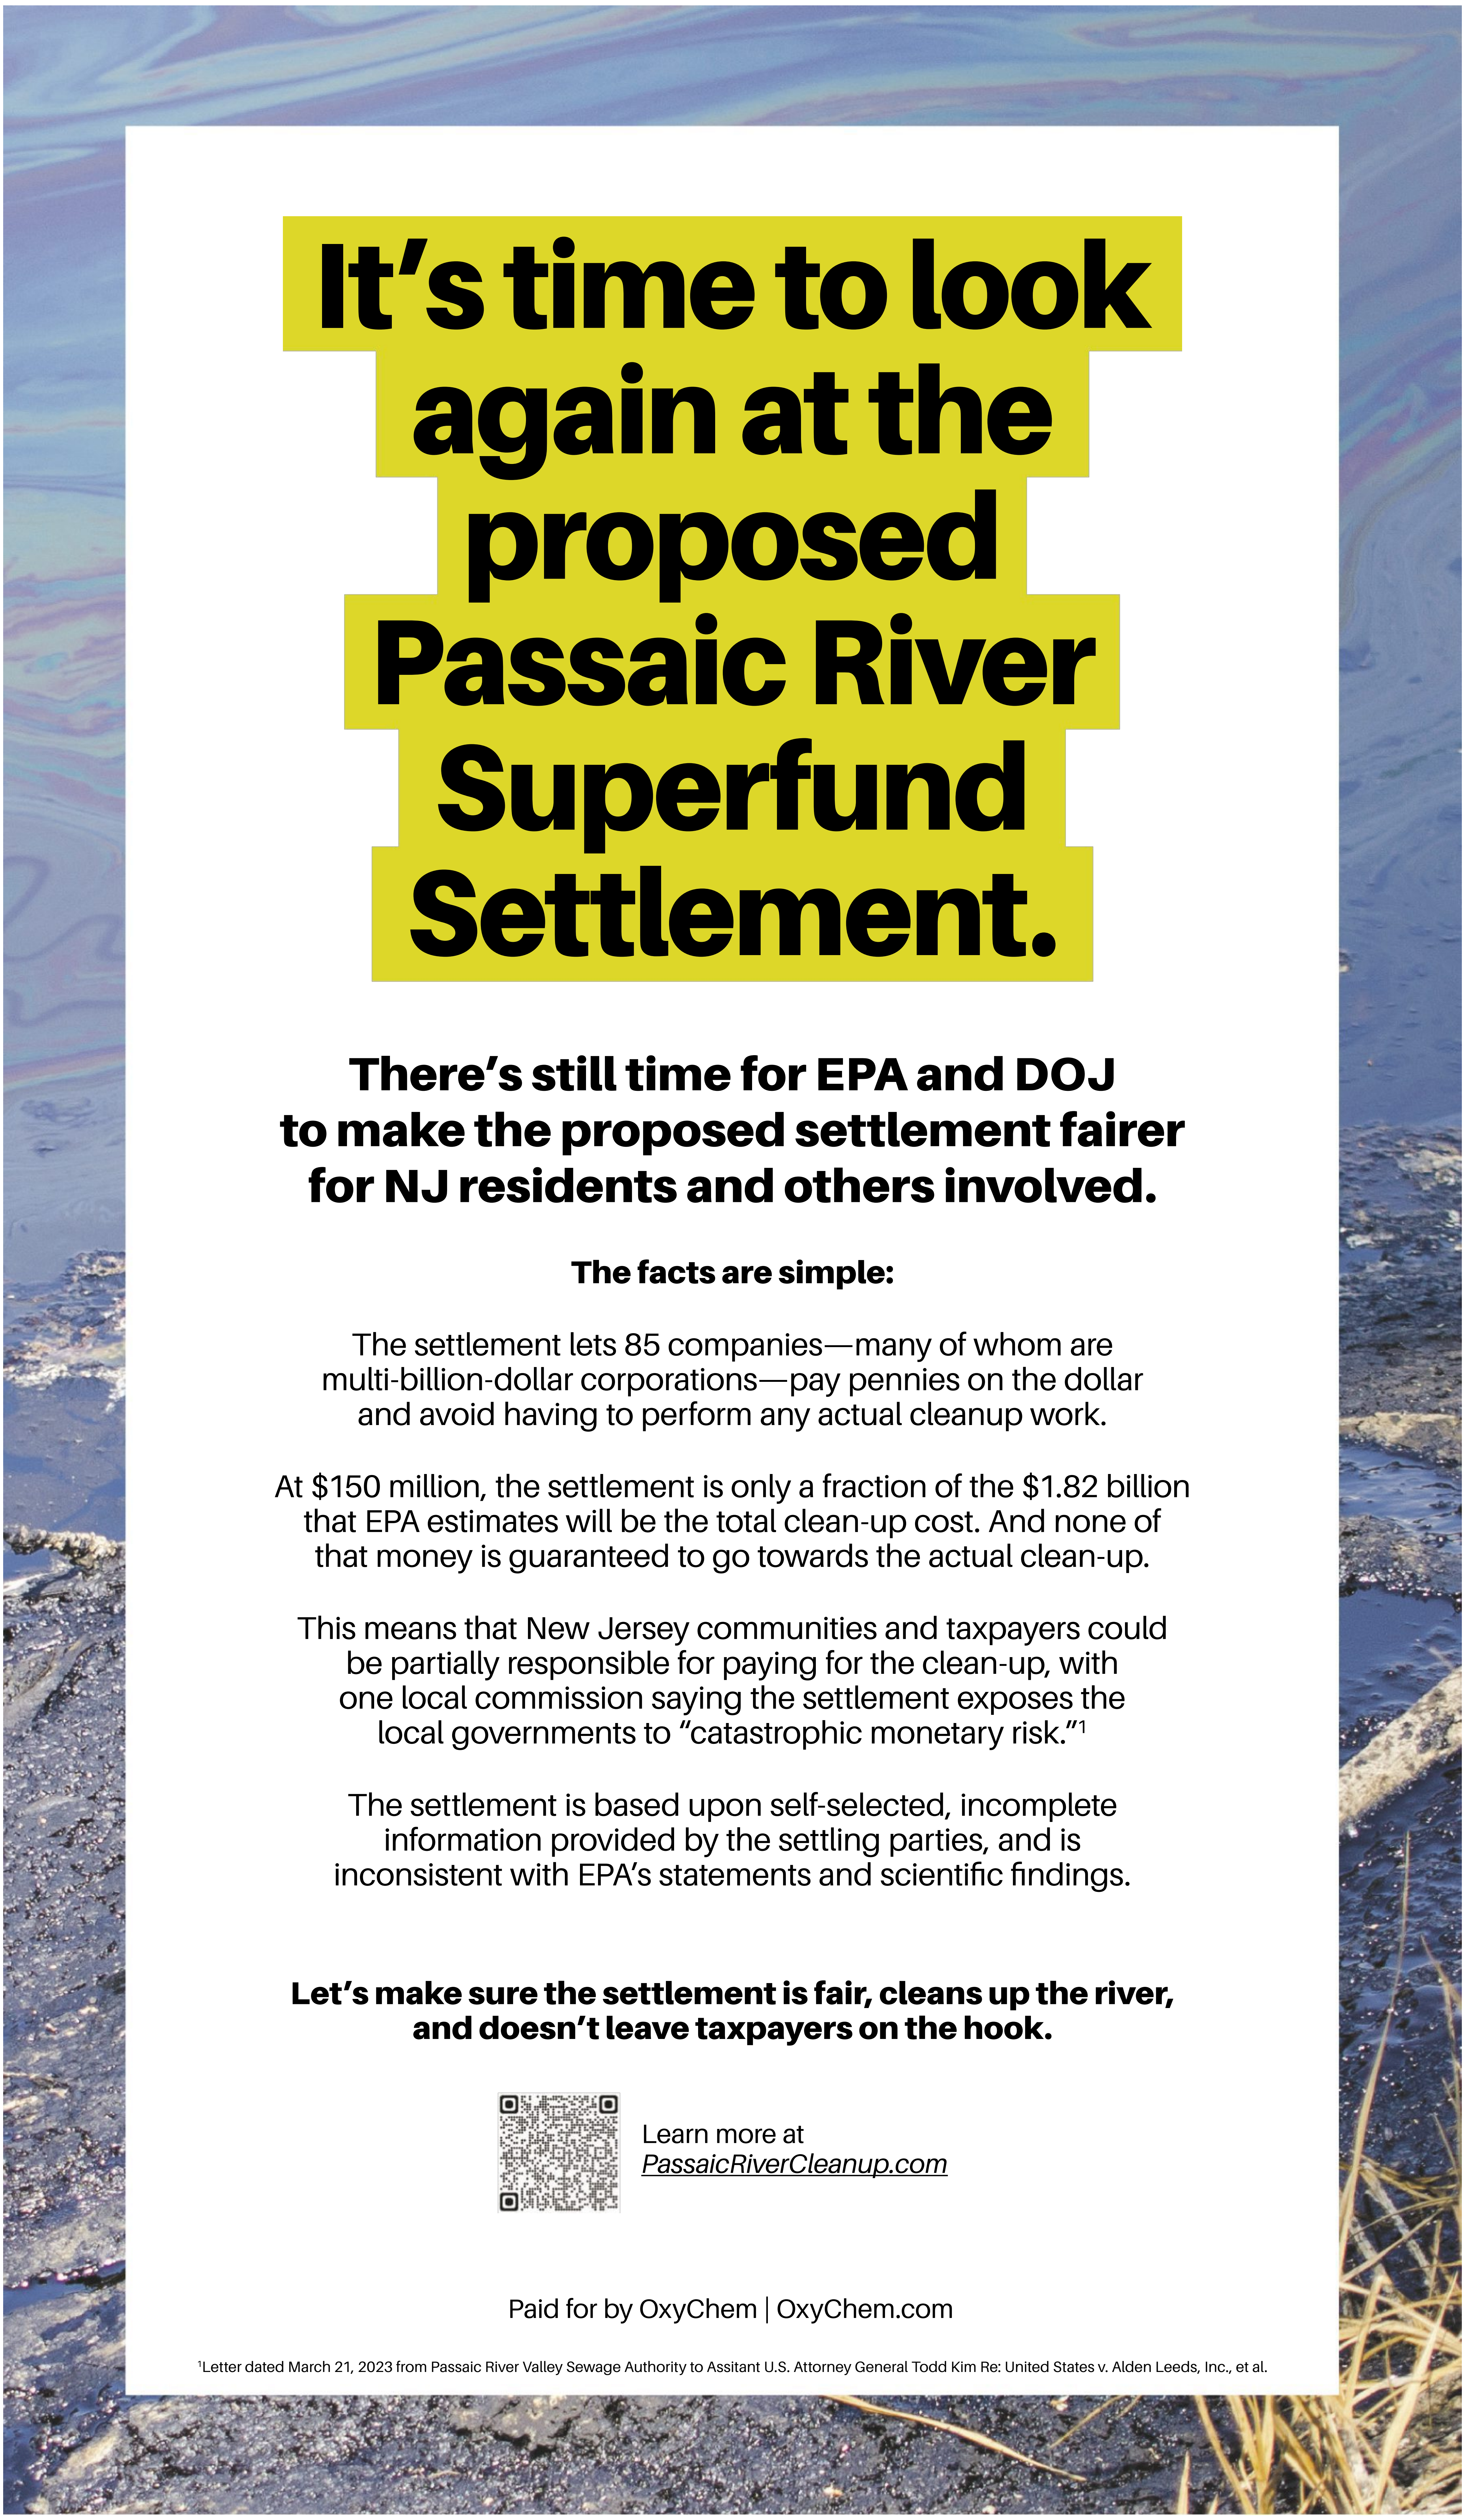

A more benevolent and practical political system would examine how pandemic-era programs — such as the expanded child tax credit and expanded support for child care — improved life for millions of Americans. The debate the country needs would focus on the lessons of these experiments, how to build on that knowledge and, yes, how to pay for the programs we ought to bring back.

The person who needs to lead this effort is Biden. There is so much talk about his age that a key factor in his polling troubles is widely overlooked: The end of the pandemic relief is leaving a lot of Americans worse off than they were.

The Bidenomics investments that did pass are worthy, even visionary, but many of their payoffs are indirect and long term. The parts of the Biden program that fell away included measures that offered immediate help, often by extending versions of the emergency interventions. The president needs to renew the fight for them and make that battle central to his 2024 campaign.

House Republicans risk kicking away their majority with the impeachment sideshow and their signature chaos. But the disillusionment with Washington they're leaving in their wake could haunt Biden far more than a few stumbles or garbled sentences. He needs to make clear to voters who is to blame for their frustration — and convince them that building back better is still a good idea.

A space to perform

Inside the world — and art — of drag kings

"Drag is one of the few spaces that I receive the affirmation for the hard work and the intention that I put into something."

King Molasses was explaining the love of the drag king art form to Washington Post photojournalist Joshua Lott, who was taking pictures of the unique nightlife phenomenon.

Drag kings are women, for the most part, who dress up and perform as men, as opposed to drag queens — men who dress and perform as women.

Molasses, who is nonbinary, is the child of Nigerian immigrants. "I grew up very sheltered, very cultured," Molasses said. "Respectability politics was ingrained in me. . . . You're here to be respectable. Live a respectable life."

"The excitement that I felt around feeling drawn to perform to drag was a very terrifying thought," Molasses told Lott. "I just kind of pushed it back, and it just never would stay back."

The world of drag kings felt fascinating, comfortable and purposeful. Plus, Molasses said, "I recognized that I would be very, very good at it."

Molasses performs several times a week, and earlier this season posed for Lott in a glued-on bushy black beard, cowboy boots and a golden turban.

"It's obviously not Hollywood, or New York or Broadway," Lott said. "But they're pretty special performers."

BOARD APPROVES, BUT HANDOVER IS UNCERTAIN

Confederate memorial ordered out of Arlington Cemetery

BY JOE HEIM AND IAN SHAPIRA

Virginia Gov. Glenn Youngkin asked the Virginia Military Institute, the nation's oldest state-supported military college and whose board members he appoints, to accept and place on property it owns 80 miles from campus a Confederate statue from Arlington National Cemetery that the Army has ordered to be removed by Jan. 1, according to a VMI spokesperson.

The statue, a towering memorial that critics say whitewashes slavery, includes a frieze showing an enslaved Black man following his owner and an enslaved woman — described on the cemetery's website as a "mammy" — holding the baby of a Confederate officer.

The Board of Visitors at VMI unanimously approved a motion Wednesday to accept the statue for placement at the Virginia Museum of the Civil War at New Market Battlefield State Historical Park — owned and operated by the college — north of VMI's campus in Lexington. The battlefield is a focal point of the school's history — it was there in 1864 that its cadets joined Confederate forces to successfully push back Union troops. An enormous mural mounted inside the college's chapel depicts the VMI corps of cadets' charge across the New Market battlefield.

It's unclear, however, what conditions must be met for the Army to hand the statue over to the commonwealth and who would absorb the cost of the transfer. The decision would require approval by the Defense Department and is

D.C. dentist loses license after claim of sexual contact

BY EMILY DAVIES

The D.C. Board of Dentistry has revoked the license of a longtime D.C. dentist with a holistic practice in Friendship Heights after a patient alleged he made inappropriate sexual contact with her and performed treatments that went beyond acceptable dental work.

The board found in a detailed, 69-page order finalized last month that dentist Mark McClure engaged in sexual contact with a patient, misrepresented himself as a "doctor of integrative medicine," performed services beyond the scope of his license and failed to maintain adequate records of his services.

In an interview with The Washington Post and in testimony before the board, a woman McClure treated alleged that the dentist gave her injections in all parts of her body and that he touched her genital area while he claimed to be doing "muscle testing" to determine where to insert a needle. The woman spoke on the condition of anonymity to protect her privacy, and The Post generally does not name victims in cases of alleged sexual assault.

"The whole experience was a complete nightmare for me," she said, stressing the toll it took on her three kids, ages 16, 14 and 10. "We're suffering from the aftermath of someone else's choices."

McClure, who did not appear at the dental board's hearing, said in a statement to The Post that the allegations were "baseless" and accused the board of being "prejudiced against me for practicing holistic dentistry." A holistic dentist uses alternative practices and natural remedies, operating under the principle that dental health is connected to overall health.

Cases of mistaken identities at home and abroad

John Kelly's Washington

A few years ago, I almost gave a guy who worked at the Department of Homeland Security a heart attack. It wasn't because I saw something and didn't say something, but because I called his office and gave my name to the person who answered the phone.

This was when John Kelly was the head of DHS. I am a John Kelly, but I'm not that John Kelly. Though I identified myself as a Washington Post columnist, that part of the message didn't get passed to the guy I had called. All he got was, John Kelly called. He wants you to call him back.

Uh-oh, the guy thought. Why does the big boss want to talk to me?

It was a case of mistaken identity. I'm fascinated by such episodes. Because I have a fairly common name, I'm not infrequently confused with others who share it, from the DHS/Trump White House John Kelly, to the "father" of the Watson computer John Kelly, to — for some reason — Baltimore Sun writer Jacques Kelly.

That kind of confusion comes from having a similar name. But what about having a similar face? In the late 1960s and early 1970s, Sherm Eagan traveled regularly from Chicago to Montreal.

He was an ad man and handled the Quaker Oats advertising account. Every couple of weeks Sherm would head to Canada to oversee the dubbing of Cap'n Crunch, Quisp and Quake cereal commercials into French. His Quebec French got good enough that he was once able to fill in for a voice actor who couldn't make the session.

Sherm used to stay in the Queen Elizabeth hotel in Montreal. There was a shopping mall in the hotel basement.

This mall had a bookstore, and one day while Sherm was standing in the checkout line, the women behind him noticed they were buying the same book: "A Terrorist Looks Back: A Novel of Revolutionary Quebec." The book was credited to Claude X. LaBrecque. It told the story of the Quebec Liberation Front, a separatist group responsible for bombings, kidnappings, bank robberies and murders. It was in the news a lot in Canada then.

Suddenly the woman behind Sherm screamed out, "Claude LaBrecque! You're the author! Will you autograph my book?"

Sherm was not the author — he was an advertising exec trying to sell Cap'n Crunch to French Canadians — but when he looked at the back cover of the book, he could see why the woman thought he was LaBrecque. The book did not have an author photo, but there was a pen-and-ink drawing of a bearded, round-faced man who looked exactly like Sherm.

Said Sherm: "The checkout clerk picked up the microphone and announced to the store that I was there to autograph books and he held up my copy."

Soon Sherm was besieged by nearly a dozen shoppers clutching copies of "A Terrorist Looks Back," eager to get them signed. He could say he wasn't LaBrecque, but isn't that exactly what the author of a book called "A Terrorist Looks Back" would say?

"I did not protest very vigorously," Sherm said. "By this point, there was no way to escape without huge embarrassment, so I signed my new checkout friend's book and about nine others. I hope Claude forgives my identity theft. I meant no harm and I did sell a few books."

Sherm stopped staying at the Queen Elizabeth hotel on future trips, afraid he might be recognized by someone who had seen him in the bookstore. He switched his business to the Bonaventure, a hotel a few blocks away.

Sherm is retired now and lives in McLean. He has never again been mistaken for the author of a terrorist book.

But what about you? Have you ever been mistaken for someone else, either because you shared a name or an appearance? Email the details — with "Mistaken Identity" in the subject line — to me at john.kelly@washpost.com.

KIPP charter grads are finishing college at higher rates than their peers

Jay Mathews

The first study of the long-term impact of the KIPP charter network, with 280 schools and almost 120,000 students in 21 states and D.C., reveals that students who attended a KIPP middle school and a KIPP high school were nearly twice as likely to complete a four-year college than a sample of similar students who did not attend KIPP.

The report by the Mathematica research group will do little to end the political battle over charters, considered by critics a drain on our education system. Charters are publicly funded, privately operated schools open to all, with admission usually determined by random lotteries. I am impressed by the Mathematica results in part because 88 percent of KIPP students are poor enough to qualify for lunch subsidies and 94 percent are African American or Hispanic.

In the last 20 years I have visited 42 KIPP schools, written scores of articles and columns about the network and wrote a 2009 book about it, "Work Hard. Be Nice." It included the life stories of the network's two founders, Dave Levin and Mike Feinberg, and two amazingly creative classroom teachers, Harriett Ball in Houston and Rafe Esquith in Los Angeles, who showed the two KIPP creators many of the methods that led to success.

I pointed out KIPP's excesses and flaws: It sometimes badgered school superintendents to approve new KIPP schools and lacked data on student progress until it arranged independent assessments such as the Mathematica report. But the energy of its teachers and the high level of its instruction made it one of the best things ever to happen to American education.

There have been large studies on the effects of charter schools in general, some of the best produced by the Center for Research on Education Outcomes (CREDO) at Stanford University. But "Long-Term Impact of KIPP Middle and High Schools on College Enrollment, Persistence and Attainment" by Alicia Demers, Ira Nichols-Barrer, Elisa Steele, Maria Bartlett and Philip Gleason at Mathematica in Cambridge, Mass., is the most detailed study of long-term outcomes at KIPP, the largest charter group in the country. The new study was paid for by Arnold Ventures, a Houston-based philanthropy founded by billionaire charter advocates John D. Arnold and Laura Arnold. (They have also given money to non-charter ventures such as teacher training and educator merit pay.)

Feinberg and Levin invented KIPP during a late-night brainstorming session in October 1993 at the apartment they shared in Houston. They were elementary school teachers recruited by the Teach For America program. They had been electrified by a demonstration Esquith had given that night with two students he had brought with him from the Hobart Boulevard Elementary School in Los Angeles. The two girls, one a fifth grader and one a sixth grader, solved complex arithmetic word problems in their heads, performed Shakespeare and showed other skills that wowed the crowd.

Feinberg and Levin called their idea the Knowledge Is Power Program, later reduced to KIPP. The name was inspired by a raucous chant used by Ball's students at Bastian Elementary School in Houston. The first KIPP school was a middle school, a staple of the American system where traditionally little is demanded of preteen students. It and the many other KIPP middle schools that soon sprouted had longer school days than usual and trained teachers to be very active, calling on every child every day. Students who misbehaved were quickly isolated until they apologized. There were songs, games, chants and much homework. Students were given the home phone numbers of their teachers to call if they had questions.

Given KIPP's middle school beginnings, it is interesting that the Mathematica study found the biggest gains were also linked to KIPP high schools, which along with KIPP elementary schools have been growing rapidly in the last two decades. The researchers compared the progress of students picked in random lotteries for entrance to the usually oversubscribed KIPP middle schools with the progress of similar low-income students who tried to get into KIPP but lost the lottery. The National Student Clearinghouse provided the college data. The study looked at 2,066 students who applied to 21 KIPP middle schools and whose families consented to their participation. About 48 percent of them won the lottery and 52 percent did not.

The study showed KIPP middle schools had a positive impact on enrollment in four-year colleges compared with what happened to students who did not get into KIPP, but the effect was not statistically significant. There did appear to be a cumulative effect when those students went on to attend a KIPP high school.

Compared with similar students who did not attend KIPP, students who went to both KIPP middle and high schools were 30.5 percentage points more likely to enroll in four-year colleges within three years of graduating from high school and 19.7 percentage points more likely to persist for at least three years in a four-year college. Thirty-nine percent of students who went to both KIPP middle and high schools graduated from a four-year college in five years, compared with just 20 percent of similar students who did not attend KIPP.

"The magnitude of these impact estimates is large, and effects of this size have substantial policy relevance," the Mathematica report concluded. "For example, these impacts match or exceed the gaps in college attainment rates in the United States among Black and Hispanic students, compared to White students … An effect of this size, extrapolated nationwide, would be large enough to nearly close the degree-completion gap for Hispanic students or entirely close the degree-completion gap for Black students in the United States."

The report said the outcomes appear to result in part from heavy participation in college-level Advanced Placement courses and tests at KIPP and from staff efforts to create what they call a college-going culture. "For example," the report said, "every KIPP high school student is paired with a college counselor who provides support in identifying and applying to college programs that are well-matched to students' capabilities, goals and needs."

Fifteen KIPP high schools in Texas, Colorado, California and Tennessee rank in the top one percent of U.S. schools measured by rate of participation in AP and International Baccalaureate final exams, which are usually more than three hours long.

My list of schools with high AP and IB participation rates, which can be found at jaymathewschallengeindex.com, shows those 15 schools in 2022 ranked as high as several prominent private schools, as well as public schools in affluent neighborhoods such as McLean High and Churchill High in the D.C. suburbs. A few other charter networks focusing on low-income students, such as IDEA, Uncommon, Uplift and Success Academy, also did well on that list.

Fifteen years ago when there were only 1,400 KIPP students at 28 schools, some of their teachers told me they wondered what direction KIPP's growth would take, because their jobs were so demanding. The spread of KIPP since and the Mathematica study results confirm something I have learned from visiting all kinds of American schools: Teaching is hard, but many educators crave a challenge, which is one reason this particular charter network has come so far.

Principals made meme of student's breast, suit says

BY KYLE MELNICK

During a verbal altercation at a Delaware high school earlier this year, an employee grabbed one student's shoulder to pull her away, according to a new lawsuit. In the process, the student, Aniya Harmon, felt her clothes come loose, exposing her right breast to onlooking students, the lawsuit alleges.

Harmon, who was a senior at Sussex Central High School, said she heard a few days later that employees were circulating a meme that displayed a student's breast. She worried the meme was of her.

About a week later, a school district administrator called Harmon's mother, Tosha White, confirming what she and her daughter feared about the meme, White told The Washington Post.

Last week, Harmon filed a lawsuit against the high school, its school district and two administrators who Harmon said used surveillance video of the May altercation to make the meme. The lawsuit alleges that administrators invaded her privacy after singer Janet Jackson's face was superimposed on top of Harmon's — a reference to Jackson's breast being revealed while she was performing during the 2004 Super Bowl halftime show.

In addition to seeking damages and attorney's fees, Harmon said she doesn't want the administrators to work in schools again.

"It hurt me the most," Harmon, 18, told The Post. "I felt humiliated; I felt embarrassed. I felt like everywhere I was going, everybody was just looking at me in a weird way because of it."

Sussex Central High School principal Bradley Layfield and assistant principal Matthew Jones have been on administrative leave since the end of May, according to Layfield's attorney, Thomas Neuberger.

Neuberger said a fight broke out between Harmon and two other students at the Georgetown, Del., school on May 17. He said Layfield was following procedure when he showed the surveillance video to roughly 11 colleagues and to a Delaware State Police trooper as part of the school's investigation into the fight. Neuberger denied that Layfield helped create the meme.

"He wants to be reinstated as the principal of the high school, which was his career goal and dream," Neuberger said.

Sussex Central High School directed interview requests to the Indian River School District, which declined to comment. Jones did not respond to a request.

A Delaware State Police spokesperson said the department is investigating the incident.

Harmon said she was walking to her English class on the morning of May 17 when she passed two arguing students. Harmon recalled telling one of them that "it was too early in the morning to be doing all that yelling." The student shouted at Harmon in response, the lawsuit says.

Harmon said she was only involved in a verbal altercation, during which a school employee grabbed her and caused her right breast to slip out of her clothes. Harmon was taken to the administrative office, where Jones said that he would review the surveillance footage, according to Harmon's lawsuit. Layfield asked Harmon to leave school that day, the lawsuit says.

Layfield later showed the surveillance footage to multiple teachers, assistant principals and a school district administrator, Neuberger said. Jones then made the meme on a school laptop and showed it to his colleagues, the lawsuit alleges.

"Mr. Jones worked with Mr. Layfield and possibly others to create a meme image of the surveillance video that was in his possession, even though he was never given permission by Plaintiff to do so," the lawsuit states.

Harmon's complaint — filed in Delaware Superior Court in New Castle County — says the administrators' actions were "malicious" and meant to cause her "embarrassment and harm."

Harmon learned about the meme May 19, the lawsuit says. The Indian River School District placed Layfield and Jones on administrative leave May 22, Neuberger said.

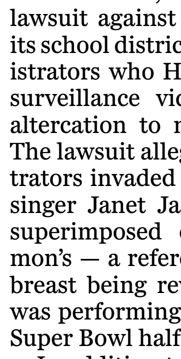

"It is a regular practice of the Indian River School District to place employees on paid leave in many circumstances, including when there is an allegation, investigation, complaint, threat against the employee, or other instance warranting paid leave," the school district said in a statement in May.

Harmon said she was embarrassed to attend her graduation ceremony May 30 but tried to act as though nothing had happened when she walked across a stage on the school's football field.

But Harmon said she soon stopped leaving her house and didn't want to go to work at a local grocery store, fearing that people would stare at her or tease her.

Harmon's mother said her daughter is now riddled with anxiety and no longer trusts others.

"You can tell that she's still thinking about it," White said. "It's always on her mind."

DENTIST FROM B1

my part ever took place," McClure said.

National Integrated Health Associates, a holistic medicine practice in Friendship Heights that McClure partially owns, said in a statement that the revocation is being appealed "as Dr. McClure does not believe he was afforded due process."

The practice also said in the statement that McClure was previously investigated by the dental board over what it described as "disagreements about biological and other forms of dentistry."

The woman said she reported McClure's conduct to police — though McClure has not been charged with any criminal wrongdoing. In an email, D.C. police said, "The case was suspended pending further information or evidence."

The D.C. Attorney General's Office, which represented the Department of Health in the proceedings before the Board of Dentistry, declined to comment on whether it had referred the matter to the U.S. attorney's office for possible criminal charges.

The U.S. attorney's office said it could not confirm nor deny an investigation of the matter.

"McClure demonstrated an abject disregard for his patients' health, safety, and dignity," D.C. Attorney General Brian L. Schwalb said in a statement. "There is no place in the District of Columbia for reckless, deceptive and predatory dental or medical practitioners."

Allegations of professional misconduct against McClure, who the attorney general's office said is in his 70s, date to at least 2019. That year, the board issued a notice of intent to take disciplinary action against the dentist, accusing him of performing services beyond the scope of his license and violating recordkeeping requirements, according to public records from D.C.'s Department of Health.

In 2021, McClure and the government reached an agreement that put McClure on a two-year probation and banned him from offering neural therapy and any treatment plan for conditions "below a patient's collarbone or in a patient's ear or shoulder."

In May 2022, the Department of Health suspended his license after the woman came forward to allege improper contact. Multiple employees of McClure's also had notified the board that he had violated the agreement with the city by practicing outside the scope of his license and keeping separate handwritten files of procedures. One employee said that his staff had "been in the process of removing information from the dental records and shredding patient documents since November 2021," according to a notice suspending his license.

In its statement, National Integrated Health Associates denied allegations that the practice had "withheld certain records" and said the "board's implication that NIHA was in any way responsible for misconduct is inaccurate." The statement added that after his license was suspended, McClure "limited his role at NIHA in accordance with the summary suspension notice."

The woman who alleged wrongdoing said she saw McClure for the first time in 2017. At that time, she was experiencing jaw pain and thought a biological dentist who uses nontraditional and sometimes controversial treatments could help take out her cavity fillings. She looked online and found McClure, who the board found was advertising himself as a "Doctor of Integrative Medicine," though he was only licensed as a dentist.

McClure, in his statement, said he has "extensive training in integrative dentistry and medicine," and "taught hundreds of dentists and treated thousands of patients."

The woman alleged that starting in February 2018, McClure began to perform "neural therapy," a procedure meant to treat chronic pain with local anesthetics. At first, she said, he concentrated injections of procaine in and around her mouth. Then, the woman told the board, McClure began to inject almost every part of her body, including her head, feet, legs, spine, kidneys, liver, gut, stomach and spleen.

In one instance, the woman told the board that McClure injected her pelvic bone, claiming that "heavy metals were inhibiting her libido." She said in an interview that he also injected a scar from childbirth at the opening of her vagina and that, one of those times, he touched her genital area as he conducted what he termed "muscle testing" to determine where to insert the needle.

The woman said she started having night terrors after that incident. When she told McClure, the dentist began prescribing her Xanax and Ambien, she said. The board found he did not document those prescriptions in his dental records.

The woman alleged that McClure behaved inappropriately. Once, after McClure asked her to drive him to the train station from his office, he "pulled a bottle out of his briefcase and just started urinating in it," the woman testified to the board.

He also performed numerous "psychokinesiology sessions," in which he asked her for "emotional components to symptoms inhibiting her treatment" — though he was not licensed to do so, the board found. The woman said in an interview that she trusted McClure as her doctor and that it took some time before she began to feel he was acting out of line.

"It's a really scary space because you're just thinking, I clearly missed all the signs, I wasn't paying attention, and now I don't trust my own intuition," she said in the interview with The Post. "Once you're 100 percent trusting, you let your guard down."

The woman said in the interview that she realized she needed to "get out" in 2019, about 2½ years after McClure started to treat her. At that point, she said, she was experiencing crippling nerve pain in her lower back and shoulders. She said she could hardly sleep and was having multiple panic attacks a day. The prescription drugs were her only form of relief.

"He would cause the problem and then have a solution that kept me in this perpetual stuck state," she said in the interview. "It was this weird psychological trapping."

One day, the woman contacted McClure's office for a Xanax refill and was told that "she could not be his patient anymore," according to her testimony described in the board's order. The woman said one of McClure's employees gave her one refill.

The next month, the woman called again for a refill. A staff member said: "[H]e's not giving it to you anymore. He's already such on thin ice that he refuses," the woman testified.

The woman said she told the employee she was going to report McClure to the dental board.

Soon after, the woman said she received a call from her primary care physician, who was a mentee of McClure's. That doctor — who was not named in the board's order — said that a "frantic" McClure had called her and that she was happy to refill the Xanax prescription, according to the woman's testimony.

The woman said the primary care physician, whom she had told previously about McClure's treatment, then told her to come into her office to meet with McClure.

"I really believe your healing will come by using your voice and looking at your predator," the primary care physician said, according to the woman's account.

At that meeting, the woman testified, the two medical professionals "teamed up" on her, and her primary care physician told her she would stop prescribing Xanax if she reported McClure.

"She kept asking, kept asking, are you going to report him? Are you going to report him?" the woman told the board. "And I said, I don't know. She goes, well, I just need you to know that if you do, there could be massive snowball effects on you and your family."

Soon after, the woman had a seizure and was hospitalized, according to the order. She spent 45 days in a treatment center in Arizona for her Xanax addiction.

While the board was looking into her case, McClure entered a consent order with the board from an unrelated complaint. That order banned him from performing any sort of neural therapy and injecting patients for any other reason other than an anesthetic for dental procedures — though an employee alleged that he violated the order.

The D.C. Board of Dentistry found McClure guilty of all seven charges against him, writing that his "conduct illustrates the depths of the Respondent's narcissistic desire to save himself regardless of the harm he had caused or would further cause his patient."

He was banned from applying for another license for five years.

"Those three years, it was a blur," the woman said. "So I just try to be as absolutely present as I can be now. Like, if my kids are home, I'm engaging and just trying to make up for that time."

Spar of wood found at garage sale was part of the sunken USS Maine

BY DAVE KINDY

For 20 years, a weathered wood and iron artifact was on display at a tiny museum in Park Ridge, N.J. A small sign stated it was "purported" to be part of the mast from the USS Maine, the U.S. Navy ship that exploded in Havana harbor in 1898 and ignited the Spanish-American War.

The story went that the worn three-foot-long spar with saw marks at one end had been discovered at a local garage sale, and then donated to the Pascack Historical Society. No one remembered the name of the person who had gifted it. Most at the museum doubted it was even authentic.

"The history was a little vague," recalled Kristin Beuscher, the society's president. "Somebody walked in and told us they had bought this artifact. The person selling it said it had been given to him by a friend who had been a diver on the wreck of the USS Maine. The donor believed it should be in a museum, so he brought it to us. There was no provenance to back it up. It was just a story."

Two years ago, Christopher Kersting stared at the display case and wondered if the tale was true. The retired history teacher, who was planning to become a docent at the museum, decided to look into it. With Beuscher's approval, Kersting began a quest to see what he could learn.

"It was a labor of love," he said. "My grandfather was an 18-year-old in the Army in the Spanish-American War, so the artifact caught my attention when I saw it. Its provenance was questionable at best. Something told me, 'Let's find out.'"

Kersting first contacted Peter McSherry, who edits a website on the history of the Spanish-American War. McSherry suggested contacting the U.S. Navy, which in turn said it would pass Kersting's photos and information along to Arlington National Cemetery — the military graveyard in Arlington, Va., that is home to the USS Maine Memorial.

The aft, or rear, mast of the USS Maine had been removed from the sunken ship during salvage operations and arrived in 1912 in Arlington, where it was installed on a granite base for the memorial to the 261 sailors and Marines who died as a result of the blast. Most are buried at the monument, located on Sigsbee Drive, named for Capt. Charles Dwight Sigsbee, who commanded the ship and survived the disaster.

How the heavy cruiser was destroyed remains a mystery. The USS Maine arrived in Havana Harbor in January 1898 to protect American interests during the Cuban war for independence from Spain. What happened the night of Feb. 15 is still debated. Historians and researchers differ on whether it was a Spanish mine or a fire in the vessel's coal bunker that caused the massive explosion.

Regardless, the incident — fueled by sensational journalism accusing Spain of a premeditated attack — sparked calls for retaliation and led to a declaration of war by the U.S. Congress. Shouts of "Remember the Maine!" drove enlistments and led to the deployment of U.S. military forces, who quickly defeated the Spanish and took possession of Cuba, the Philippines and other territories.

Kersting's large file of photos and documents ended up on the desk of Roderick Ganier, chief curator at Arlington National Cemetery's museum. He read through Kersting's documents about the small wood spar.

"We were offered this piece of wood that I had a gut feeling was authentic but had to be sure," Ganier said.

To determine whether the spar could have been part of the USS Maine's mast, Ganier turned to Steve Whitaker, a retired Navy captain and an expert on the ship's history and construction. He traveled to New Jersey to examine the artifact.

"It was an interesting hunt," Whitaker said. "It was like looking for a leaf on a tree in a forest in a preserve on a continent far away."

Whitaker soon determined that the mast's wood and iron fittings matched the materials used to construct the armored battleship at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in 1889. He consulted records and plans in the archives of the New York Public Library to confirm his suspicions. He then examined paint flecks on the artifact. The USS Maine was originally painted white, then repainted tan and finally covered in black paint.

"There are definitely three types of paint remains on this relic," he said. "There's a black oil-based overcoat with a lead-based coat underneath that was sort of a straw color. Underneath that there are remnants of a whitewash paint."

Whitaker then started examining photos of the USS Maine from before and after the explosion. Specifically, he looked at images that showed the aft mast and how it changed over time. The breakthrough came when he found an 1899 photo of the wreck in Havana harbor with the proof he was looking for.

"There is a narrow window of time when the ship is being taken apart, so we see the different stages of salvage," Whitaker said. "The cross member of this spar is on the mast until we get to this photo, where it's gone. You can see it was cut off."

Evidence in hand, Ganier and Whitaker went back to the Pascack Historical Society. Beuscher was elated by the news. Then, she realized she had a decision to make.

"The artifact really didn't belong in our collection," she said. "Our museum focuses on local history. We could have sold this to a collector and made a lot of money but decided to do the right thing. The best place for it was at Arlington National Cemetery, where it could be properly preserved and displayed."

In March, Ganier and Whitaker traveled to New Jersey to accept a gift of the spar from Beuscher and Kersting at the Park Ridge museum. In late September, Arlington National Cemetery staff will hand over the artifact to conservators, who will undertake a multiyear effort to protect it from further deterioration.

"It was exciting," Kersting said. "When they came to take formal possession, it was a big event. One of the historians told us, 'We rarely get to find things like this. It's kind of like Christmas morning.'"

For Whitaker, the hunt isn't over. He continues to search archives and records to try to determine who cut the spar from the mast — which in turn could reveal how it got from Havana harbor to a garage sale in New Jersey. Both Navy divers and private salvage operators worked on dismantling the USS Maine. He has narrowed his list down to a few suspects.

"I've been working on a project with the USS Maine for a long time," Whitaker said. "It's been a long process and interest. This is just one more piece of the puzzle."

OBITUARIES

ANATOL UGORSKI, 80

Long-hidden talent of classical piano

BY EMILY LANGER

When pianist Anatol Ugorski left the Soviet Union in 1990, he had no piano to play at the refugee camp where he landed in East Berlin. He had not even enough money for subway fare to travel from the camp to the home of a friend who had offered him the use of her Steinway.

Once, he entered a digital piano store wearing a long rubber coat that seemed to swallow his slight frame, his hair in its characteristic disheveled state. The staff, taking him for a homeless person, moved to usher him out. But then Mr. Ugorski sat down at one of their instruments and, to their awe, began to play "Pictures at an Exhibition," a piano suite by the Russian composer Modest Mussorgsky. Mr. Ugorski did not stop until he had reached the end of the 10th and final movement.

That performance, such as it was, marked the beginning of a musical career that had once seemed foreclosed. Mr. Ugorski, who died Sept. 5 at age 80, was approaching 50 when he arrived in the soon-to-be reunited Germany. He had spent decades relegated — metaphorically and at times physically — to the hinterlands of the Soviet Union by authorities who viewed him as suspect for his embrace of Western music of the avant-garde.

In Germany, where Mr. Ugorski was discovered and placed under contract with Deutsche Grammophon, he revealed himself to the broader classical music world as an artist of extraordinary talent.

He was at home not only in the music of modern composers such as Stravinsky, Scriabin, Messiaen, Schoenberg and Berg but also in the more classical works of Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann and Brahms. Even critics who objected to his sometimes eccentric style agreed that his recordings deserved to be heard, especially because he had been all but silenced for so long.

"My style comes from myself," Mr. Ugorski once told the London Evening Standard, "and developed on its own in my solitude."

Anatolii Zalmanovich Ugorskii was born on Sept. 28, 1942, to a Jewish family in the Siberian city of Rubtsovsk, where they had been evacuated during the Siege of Leningrad.

He nearly starved during World War II. After the war, his family returned to Leningrad — now St. Petersburg — where he grew up. His father was an engineer. His mother, a sales clerk and usher at a cinema, sneaked Mr. Ugorski and his friends into the movies, a rare pleasure for them amid the suffering of the postwar years.

Mr. Ugorski was the fourth of five children and lived during his youth in a communal apartment, with an entire family to each room and a shared kitchen and bathroom. He had no access to musical instruments other than a xylophone.

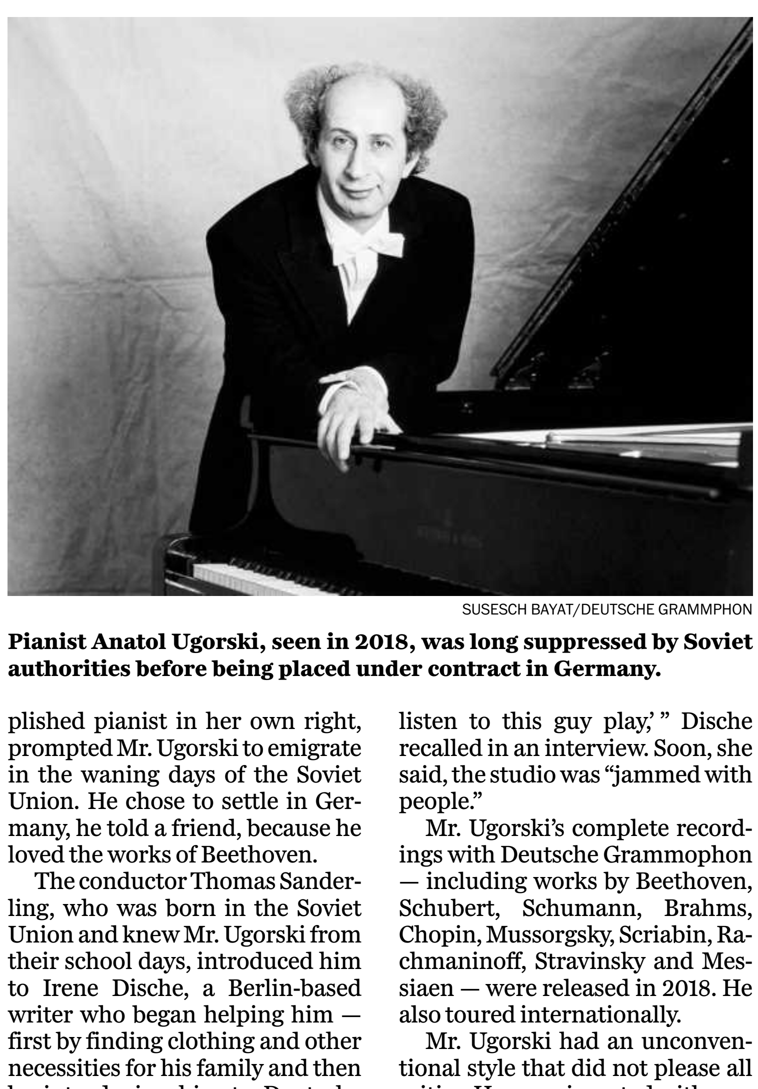

His mother, hearing him play and sing, divined his musical potential and took him at age 6 to audition at the Leningrad Conservatory, where he was admitted to a school for musically gifted children. He was assigned to play the piano, he later recounted, because the shape of his hands was deemed suited to the instrument.

Mr. Ugorski's future seemed assured by 1967, when he won third prize at the George Enescu Festival in Bucharest. (First prize went to the Romanian pianist Radu Lupu.) But his career was essentially ended the same year when he attended a concert of the BBC Symphony Orchestra during its visit to the Soviet Union.

The performance featured composer Pierre Boulez conducting a selection of modernist works not in line with Soviet cultural dictates of the time. Mr. Ugorski, who was seen applauding with excessive enthusiasm, was thereafter banned from giving performances of any prominence. He worked as an accompanist for a youth choir and played in recitals organized for workers, on at least one occasion receiving payment in the form of cheese.

Eventually he received a teaching post at the conservatory, but his opportunities remained scarce.

Antisemitic threats against his then-teenage daughter, Dina Ugorskaja, who became an accomplished pianist in her own right, prompted Mr. Ugorski to emigrate in the waning days of the Soviet Union. He chose to settle in Germany, he told a friend, because he loved the works of Beethoven.

SUSESCH BAYAT/DEUTSCHE GRAMMPHON

Pianist Anatol Ugorski, seen in 2018, was long suppressed by Soviet authorities before being placed under contract in Germany.

The conductor Thomas Sanderling, who was born in the Soviet Union and knew Mr. Ugorski from their school days, introduced him to Irene Dische, a Berlin-based writer who began helping him — first by finding clothing and other necessities for his family and then by introducing him to Deutsche Grammophon.

During his first recording session with the label, Mr. Ugorski played Beethoven's "Diabelli" Variations. "After a few hours, they started calling people to come to the piano studio — 'you've got to listen to this guy play,'" Dische recalled in an interview. Soon, she said, the studio was "jammed with people."

Mr. Ugorski's complete recordings with Deutsche Grammophon — including works by Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Chopin, Mussorgsky, Scriabin, Rachmaninoff, Stravinsky and Messiaen — were released in 2018. He also toured internationally.

Mr. Ugorski had an unconventional style that did not please all critics. He experimented with musical tempos, playing works at speeds much faster or much slower than they were traditionally performed.

He rejected stasis, once remarking that "the greatest danger is to turn into one's own recordings." To make a piece feel new to him, he might play it wearing a jacket that covered his hands, or sit at the piano in a rocking chair rather than on a bench.

"As a pianist, Ugorski [homed] in on the essence of a work as he, uninfluenced by any performing tradition, perceived it — and then he exhumed exactly that essence out of the notes," music critic Jens F. Laurson wrote in a tribute after Mr. Ugorski's death. "To what extent this approach succeeded in unveiling hitherto hidden musical details always depended very much on the listener's subjective response. Those who responded to it never forgot a performance of his."

Mr. Ugorski died at a hospital in the German town of Lemgo, near his home in Detmold. He had cancer, according to his son-in-law, Ilja Kukuj.

Mr. Ugorski's first marriage, to pianist Gabriella Talrose, ended in divorce. His wife of more than four decades, musicologist Maja Elik, died in 2012. Their daughter, Dina, died in 2019.

Weeks before his death, Mr. Ugorski married pianist Minze Kim, his partner of 10 years. Besides his wife, of Detmold, survivors include a sister and a grandchild.

When Mr. Ugorski rose to fame in Germany, he captured the imagination of Western listeners, many of whom found the pathos of his music heightened by his deprivation in the Soviet Union during what might have been the prime of his career.

"Do not make me sound a victim," Mr. Ugorski cautioned them. "I know artists and scientists who had it much worse."

DUNLEAVY

BETTY JEAN DUNLEAVY (Age 89)

Betty exited this world, surrounded by her family, on August 31, 2023. Wife of James Elliott Dunleavy who preceded her in death; devoted and loving mother of Kevin (Mary Ann) of Fairfax, Kristie (Abdel Latifi) of Manassas and Kerry Peros of Manassas; proud grandmother of Nikki Smith (Irving) of Manassas Park, Noah Peros of Oakland, CA, Paige Dunleavy (Patrick Jackson) of Fairfax, Va and Grace Dunleavy of Fairfax; and step-great-grandmother of James Jackson of Fairfax. Also survived by nieces Shannon MacGregor of Arlington and Kelly Chapman of Alexandria, VA, and nephew Christopher Chapman (Kendra) of Tennessee.

Betty Heflin was born in Washington, DC, on July 20, 1934, and grew up in Arlington, VA, where she graduated from Washington & Lee High School. Betty and her husband, Elliott, lovingly raised their family in Vienna, VA. Betty worked as an executive secretary and office manager for the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Sterling Institute and the Business Bank.

Known for her kindness, compassion and devotion to family, Betty lost her husband in 1974, when, at the age of 39 she finished raising her three children as a working mom. Betty was a voracious reader, enjoying the works of Anne Tyler, David Halberstam and Laura Hillenbrand. She devoured everything she could find on Virginia history, the Civil War and Washington politics. She also had a keen interest in genealogy, tracing the roots of her family through several generations.

Betty also was an avid sports fan, indoctrinated by her father, William Oscar Heflin, with trips to Washington Senators games at Griffith Stadium and to horse races at numerous tracks in the region. For many years, Betty wrote newspaper game reports for the Vienna Little League and Babe Ruth League. She also held season tickets for the Washington Bullets, which provided many memorable family outings to the Capital Centre. Betty never missed a Washington Nationals game, reveling with her family as her beloved Nats captured the 2019 World Series.

Later in life, Betty's happiest times were spent celebrating holidays and birthdays and watching sports events with her children and grandchildren. She also was close to her sister and brother-in-law, Barbara and Don Chapman who preceded her in death.

FLATOW

FRED FLATOW

Fred Flatow, of Bethesda, Maryland, passed away after a long illness on September 15, 2023. Fred was born in Königsberg, Germany, in 1928. In 1938, his family escaped to Santiago, Chile. There, he met and married Ursula Goldschmidt and, in 1949, the couple immigrated to the United States. Arriving without even a high school diploma, he earned a master's degree in electrical engineering from George Washington University and subsequently worked at Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, MD, where he was the U.S. project manager of the SarSat (Search and Rescue Satellite-Aided Tracking) program. SarSat, then a pilot program involving four countries, tested the placement of beacons in planes and boats and detectors on satellites that are able to identify distress signals from those beacons, locate their source, and notify authorities to dispatch search-and-rescue teams. SarSat is still in existence today, is supported by 43 countries, and has rescued over 60,000 people.

In addition to his professional success, Fred was an avid bicyclist, a devoted student of literature and the opera, and a hobby photographer. For many years, he volunteered and lectured at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, DC, and he participated in the Museum's acclaimed "First Person: Conversations with Holocaust Survivors" podcast series. His memoir, Loss and Restoration: Stories from Three Continents, chronicles his escape from Nazi Germany; his youth in Chile; and the rewarding life, career, and family he and his beloved wife built in the United States.

Fred is survived by his wife of 75 years, Ursula Flatow; their three children, Ruth Shapiro (Phillip), Steven Flatow and Daniel Flatow; and five grandchildren, Elisa, Laura and Tamara Shapiro, and Robert and James Flatow. The funeral and interment will be held at 1 p.m. on September 18 at Garden of Remembrance, 14321 Comus Rd, Clarksburg, MD. Shiva will be held at the home of Ruth and Phillip Shapiro, from 6:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Monday through Thursday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday. In lieu of flowers, please consider a donation to the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum or JSSA Hospice.

RAMSAY ROLAND PAL (Age 92)

Of Washington DC, passed away on August 27, 2023, from pneumonia after a brief illness. He was the son of the late Dr. Ram Das Pal and Rosalind Abreo Pal, and was preceded in death by his two sisters, Valli Ponnamperuma and Rosemarie Pal. He is survived by his only niece, Roshini M. Ponnamperuma, of Washington, DC, who was at his side.

Ramsay's journey encompassed 9 decades of history and change in locales as diverse as British Empire India/Burma, post World War II London, 1960's Berkeley, 21st Century Manhattan, and Washington, DC. In 1941, at the age of 10, at the chaotic start of WWII In Burma, he used his wits and courage to escape and bring back help to save the lives of his mother and sisters and household, who were being held hostage at gunpoint. He would continue this mission of saving, protecting, and supporting throughout his life.

In later years, when asked to explain or elaborate, Ramsay would make a delicately dismissive gesture, like a tennis backhand. "Not worth mentioning", he would say. "It had to be done."

Although born into comfort and privilege and raised in a loving and nurturing home by his Kashmiri Hindu father, a medical doctor, and his Goan-Burmese mother, a former teacher, Ramsay was no stranger to financial vicissitudes (due to inherited family debt and his father's working largely for free); familial tensions (due to in-law conflicts); and social prejudice (as cross-cultural Indians living in Burma, they were a minority in a minority). This awareness of the uniqueness of each person's experience and situation heightened Ramsay's very original perspective on just about everything. Even as a young school boy, his math teachers would find his answers correct but derived totally differently from what had been taught in class. In a day and age where rote learning was the norm, this independence tended to set him apart from his classmates, with varying consequences. He persisted in taking the intellectual "road less traveled" - quietly analyzing things in his own time and way.

Shortly post-war, at 15, Ramsay's creativity led him to rig up an electric light system from salvaged material, totally by himself - powered entirely by the battery of his father's car. This car also figured in his learning to drive - backwards only, in time-honored fashion!

At age 16, in the turmoil of pre-Independence Burma, Ramsay and his two sisters (ages 19 and 13) traveled to London on their own, in several short stages by seaplane, for their education and a new life. Handsome and nearly 6 feet tall, he again was the family protector and source of strength - deciphering the London Underground (subway) map at Piccadilly Circus, searching for housing (in short supply after the Blitz) clipping the ration coupons, navigating a "pea-soup" fog and a "brave new world".

Studying physics at Imperial College and the University of London, Ramsay also worked at the Courtauld Institute of Art, burnishing his photography skills and laying his foundation as a Renaissance man, equally versed in art and science. Progressing to California, where the family had relocated, he continued to work in physics and chemistry research at Stanford University and in the budding computer and electronics industry. He also used his prodigious DIY skills to provide pleasant yet affordable accommodation for his mother and younger sister, whom he supported. He had a unique ability to understand technology by taking it apart, analyzing it, and then reassembling it - be it a "talking" toy teddy bear, a watch, a car part, a radio, a lab mass spectrometer, or a gas chromatograph. As always, he was the "go-to guy". When his married sister was stricken with a serious case of flu (this was before the yearly vaccine became the norm) while her husband was overseas on business, it was Ramsay who dropped everything and came to her rescue.

The twin calls of career and family brought our hero to the East Coast, where he spent 6 exciting years in chemistry research at the University of Maryland, College Park, culminating in a publication relating to the NASA Viking Lander, in the prestigious journal, "Science". This was followed by 25 years at the City University of New York (CUNY), at the flagship "City College" campus, specializing in analytical chemistry of topics ranging from vision (rhodopsin) to virus testing (hemagglutination) to organic chemistry (cyclohexane derivatives). Ramsay dealt with academic egos and the research funding roller-coaster with equanimity. Having lived through things like the war, he said, gave one a different perspective.

During these years, he continued to generously support his widowed mother and unmarried younger sister, as well as adopt an abandoned Shepherd/Beagle puppy, who grew into his faithful canine companion, Donã Isabella. He acquired a house spacious enough for all.

In retirement, Ramsay was busier than ever, enjoying the freedom to read voraciously and pursue interests in classical music, current events, economic and investment trends, and diet and health, while avidly following and supporting PBS programs, donating generously to charities such as the Special Olympics and Alzheimer's Research and amassing gadgets galore! He also occasionally indulged in a tasteful, well-cut Cary Grant-style tweed jacket or dIscreetly-patterned silk tie.

He would remember each family birthday or holiday with an exquisitely chosen card, always sent by Express Mail and containing a lavish cash gift. His largesse extended to many people he encountered. Having worked hard all his life to be financially independent and self-sufficient, he was open-handed in sharing the benefits with others.

Ever responsive to needs outside himself, Ramsay returned to the DC area 7 years ago to reunite with his beloved family, seeing his younger sister, Rosemarie Rani, through her final illness and being at the side of his older sister, Valli, when she breathed her last. He was a constant companion to his only niece, Roshini, during the isolation and stress of the COVID pandemic, keeping things balanced with his impish yet gentle humor and unique way of looking at the world. Even at 92, he would protectively check windows and doors at night and would investigate strange noises, to rule out potential danger.

Ramsay bore the challenges of life, aging, and illness gracefully, for the most part. As he said so often, with that gently dismissive gesture, "Not worth mentioning. It had to be done".

Visitation will be at St. Ann Catholic Church (4001 Yuma St., NW) on Tuesday, September 19, 2023 from 9:30 a.m. until time of the funeral Mass at 10 a.m. Interment will be private. Please view and sign the family's online guest-book at

PATRICIA J. GRENIER

An extraordinary mother who selflessly gave of herself in so many Catholic (and other) charitable endeavors, Patricia J. Grenier of Potomac, Maryland passed away peacefully on August 29, 2023, surrounded by her family. Pat was 89 and died of dementia and Parkinson's Disease related symptoms. Pat was widowed by her beloved husband, Edward, in 2021.

Pat was born in Queens, New York to Irene and Joseph Cederle, who raised Pat and her beloved sister Tippie with abundant love. Their other gifts to Pat and Tippie included a constant sense of humor and deep family values.

Pat and Ed were married for 64 years and theirs was a great love story, whose four cornerstones were faith, family, Catholic charitable good works, and summers at Cape Cod. They were completely devoted to each other and created an extraordinary marriage. They delighted in entertaining friends and family in their homes. Every summer the family gathered in Cape Cod, and Pat leaves a legacy of prioritizing the importance of family over all else. Pat and Ed left behind literally thousands of family photographs, as well as countless hours of video of almost every family holiday gathering.

Pat graduated cum laude with a Bachelor of Science degree from Adelphi College in 1956, and married Ed on June 22, 1957, just after Ed's first year at Harvard Law School. Pat and Ed moved to the D.C. area in 1959. Pat was a devout Catholic, and she and Ed were loyal parishioners of Our Lady of Mercy Church.

Not only was Pat a philanthropist who gave generously to Catholic-based institutions, but her volunteer and charitable work was boundless. She organized and chaired galas and other charity events to raise money for many causes. Pat also received numerous awards for her endeavors.

In addition to her devoted sister Tippie, Pat leaves her beloved three children, Tori Eklund of Florence, MA, Edward J. Grenier III (Lynette) of Potomac, Peter Grenier (Nancy) of Darnestown, and six grandchildren, Sara, Kristen, Sydney, Winston, Genevieve, and Haley, and one exceptional nephew, Paul.

Pat's greatest joy in life was the time spent with her grandchildren. She treasured every moment, and they all brought her comfort in her final hours.

Friends who would like to celebrate Pat's extraordinary life are invited to the visitation and reception on Thursday, September 21, 2023, from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. at Joseph Gawler's Sons, 5130 Wisconsin Ave., NW, Washington, DC.

The family asks that in lieu of flowers, donations may be made to Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of Washington. https://www.catholiccharitiesdc.org/catholiccharitiescenter/

Funeral mass and interment private.

TUTTLE

DONALD LATHAM TUTTLE

Donald Latham Tuttle, 88, was born in Miami, Florida on October 6, 1934, the second son of William O. and Agnes Latham Tuttle died on August 21, 2023. He graduated from Miami High School in 1952 where he excelled scholastically and had distinction as a journalist on the MH Times and as a featured reporter for the weekly Miami Daily News Youth Roundup News. At the University of Florida, Gainesville, Don received a BSBA. He became a member of Beta Theta Pi, was elected to membership in Phi Beta Kappa, Florida Blue Key, Phi Kappa Phi and Beta Gamma Sigma. He wrote for the Florida Gator, was president of the Pep Club and a member of ROTC. Following graduation, Don was commissioned a lieutenant in USAF. He married Margaret Joan Conkling on December 29, 1956 at Coral Gables Congregational Church. She was then a senior at the University of Florida and he a Second Lieutenant in training as USAF navigator so they each had to return to their respective duties until Margaret graduated in June 1957. Don was able to choose where he wished to be posted so he opted for MacDill AFB, Tampa, Florida. Don was a crew member of the 306th Air Refueling Squadron whose mission was intercepting and refueling American bomber squadron planes flying missions over the Arctic Circle during the Cold War. After serving our country for four years, Don was retired with the rank of Captain.

Following military service, he returned to the University of Florida for graduate education, earning an MBA and began his academic teaching career as a Visiting Professor at the University of Florida. He was granted a Julian Price Fellowship to pursue a doctoral degree at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill which was accomplished in 1966. He then received an appointment to the UNC Finance faculty, serving until 1969. The next year, 1970, Indiana University made him Professor and Chairperson, Department of Finance School of Business. Under his leadership of 2 UNC1 years, the Finance Department increased in size and gained international distinction.

Donald authored and edited six books, Security Analysis and Portfolio Management, which introduced using decision and probability theory and statistical techniques to different phases of investing. Also the seminal Managing Investment Portfolios, the definitive work in portfolio management practiced by astute practitioners and internationally by the Certified Financial Institute. This volume was translated into Japanese by the Japanese Society of Financial Analysts.

During his tenure, Indiana University granted him sabbatical leave to accept appointments as Visiting Professor at the European Institute of Business Administration (INSEAD), 1977-78; to the University of Virginia, 1982-3; Georgetown University, 1987-88.

Don also earned a charter from the Institute of Financial Analysts in 1971, which began a lifetime of service, first as a volunteer and then as his second career in Charlottesville, Virginia, 1992-2007 as a Senior Vice President. He was a major contributor to a post graduate chartering process bringing order, rigor and innovation to the curriculum, examinations and grading process. He was responsible for deciding to use a psychometric consultant to verify the validity of the CFA examinations which are granted with worldwide distinction in the field of financial careers. A CFA charter requires three years of study with an examination at the end of each year.

For these contributions, The Donald L. Tuttle Award for Excellence in CFA Exam Grading was established in 2001 and has since been given annually in Charlottesville. In previous years, Donald himself, had received the Institute's C. Stewart Sheppard Award and the Alford C. "Pete" Moreley Distinguished Service Award.

Dr. Tuttle is a former President, Vice President and Executive Director of the Financial Management Association and received the FMA Fellow Recognition Award for his service. He was Associate Editor of The Journal of Finance and Financial Management. He was a member of ICFA's CFA Digest Editorial Board for eighteen years; former member of the Institute's Board of Trustees.

Don also served as a member of the Board of Trustees of Bank One's Group Mutual funds, member of the American Red Cross Retirement System, and the Research Foundation of the Institute of Chartered Financial Analysis; member of the Board of Regents of the College for Financial Planning and Board of Directors of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Indianapolis where he chaired the Audit Committee. He was a member of the New York Society of Security Analysts.

Don and Margaret (also known as Peg) enjoyed a lifetime of travel which Don Carefully planned. Favorite places were the Outerbanks, Myrtle Beach, Sanibele, Florida and Banner Elk, N.C. for many summers. A few winters were spent at their condo for the love of mountains. Blowing Rock, Abingdon, Virginia, for plays, antiquing and food. They attended Miami High School Class reunions and visited family while there. More serious travel was Italy, Greece, they cruised the Mediterranean or toured Europe. For their 50th anniversary, Don chose a sail around Australia, touring the islands and the Great Barrier Reef.

In addition to his wife, Margaret, he is survived by two daughters, Laura Latham, Galveston, Texas; Angelyn Alexander, Atlanta, Georgia; grandson, Alexander Pivateau, LaPorte, Texas; granddaughters, Kathryn and Lara Alexander, Atlanta, Georgia. His brother, William M. Tuttle of Jupiter, Florida, nephew, William Tuttle, Miami, Florida; and niece, Wendy Camp, Jupiter, Florida.

The Tuttles built a home, "Lane's End" at 2550 Holly Knoll Lane, Charlottesville, Virginia, before moving to the Colonnades in 2013. They were members of Ivy Creek United Methodist Church.

Don was buried at the Ivy Creek Cemetery with Teague Funeral Home in charge of the arrangements.

THE WEATHER

Breezy and comfortable

A brief shower is possible around sunrise, but skies clear very quickly into sunny conditions. Humidity lowers to a comfortable level as north-northwesterly breezes blow in dry air upon gusts as high as 25 mph. High temperatures top out in the mid-70s to near 80. Overnight, northwest breezes calm a bit as skies stay clear and the air remains agreeable. Low temperatures should get into windows-open territory of mid- to upper 50s.

VMI may receive Confederate statue

complicated by a lawsuit pending in federal court that seeks to keep the statue in Arlington Cemetery. VMI in a release after the vote, first reported by Cardinal News, noted the school would need permission from "the Army and all the necessary funding from available federal or state resources for the project."

Hugh Fain, a member of VMI's Board of Visitors, said during the board's Wednesday session that the monument was a "gift we're being asked to accept" and described the statue as "a reconciliation effort" at the time of its creation. Fain said Youngkin (R) and his administration believe the New Market battlefield is the "most appropriate place" for the monument.

Youngkin's spokeswoman did not respond to specific questions about whether the governor has reached an agreement with the Defense Department or discussed the issue with the Army or Arlington Cemetery.

The Army also did not address specific questions about whether any agreement was in place to deliver the statue to Virginia officials. Renea C. Yates, director of the Office of Army Cemeteries, said in a statement that environmental and historic preservation requirements must be met "prior to any determination being made as to a final disposition of the monument, including the possibility of transfer to a third party such as Virginia Military Institute."

The 32-foot-tall bronze statue was commissioned by the United Daughters of the Confederacy and unveiled at a ceremony presided over by President Woodrow Wilson in 1914, almost 50 years after the Civil War ended. Its sculptor, Moses Jacob Ezekiel, was a Confederate veteran and VMI graduate who fought in the Battle of New Market. He is buried at the base of the statue, which will not be removed, so that Ezekiel's remains and other nearby gravesites will not be disturbed.

Youngkin's decision to ask VMI to take the statue followed efforts by him to have it remain at Arlington, his spokeswoman, Macaulay Porter, said in an email.

Youngkin asked Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin to keep the statue at Arlington Cemetery but "in spite of the governor's insistence, the Biden administration still sought to remove the statue," Porter said in an emailed statement. "In order to continue to honor the legacy of Moses Ezekiel, a legendary sculptor and graduate of VMI, the Governor believes that the New Market battlefield will provide a fitting backdrop to Ezekiel's legacy even though he disagrees with the Biden administration that the statue should have been slated for removal."

A Defense Department commission created by Congress in 2021 to review the names of military facilities and assets associated with the Confederacy and suggest changes said in its recommendation to remove the Arlington memorial that it "offers a nostalgic, mythologized vision of the Confederacy, including highly sanitized depictions of slavery."

The Naming Commission, which also recommended changing the names of nine military bases, cited in its decision the imagery on the memorial and an accompanying Latin phrase celebrating the Lost Cause retelling of the Confederacy. "This narrative of the Lost Cause, which romanticized the pre-Civil War South and denied the horrors of slavery, fueled White backlash against Reconstruction and the rights that the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments (1865-1870) had granted to African-Americans," the commission wrote.

The potential arrival of the Confederate monument at the VMI-owned property would come at a delicate point in the college's recent history.

In late 2020, then-Gov. Ralph Northam (D) ordered an independent investigation into VMI's racial climate. The news sparked a wave of change that has continued to rankle many of its conservative alumni.

That fall, the longtime White superintendent, a retired four-star general, resigned and was quickly replaced by the college's first Black leader, retired Army Maj. General Cedric T. Wins, a 1985 VMI alumnus. Then VMI did what to many alumni was unthinkable: It removed a more than 100-year-old statue of Confederate Gen. Stonewall Jackson — also made by Ezekiel — that stood on its parade ground directly in front of the student barracks. The piece, which cadets used to have to salute, was eventually moved to the Virginia Museum of the Civil War, where it stands near the parking lot.

In the spring of 2021, the Northam-ordered probe, conducted by the law firm of Barnes & Thornburg, concluded that VMI suffered from "institutional racism and sexism."

Later, the college established a Diversity, Equity and Inclusion program. But a political action committee called The Spirit of VMI, composed mostly of White, conservative alumni donors, fought the initiative, particularly the "equity" component. Earlier this year, VMI changed the name of the program to Diversity, Opportunity and Inclusion to match the Youngkin administration's diversity office in Richmond, and shortly afterward, the college's first chief diversity officer, Jamica Love, who was the highest-ranking Black woman at the college, resigned.

Micki McElya, a history professor at the University of Connecticut and author of a Pulitzer Prize finalist book on Arlington Cemetery, "The Politics of Mourning," said in an email that the statue's removal was long overdue — and that destroying the object is not the best course, either. Wherever it goes, she said, the statue should be contextualized to clarify "the toxic misrepresentations of slavery, the Confederacy, and the Civil War the monument represents."

She added: "If VMI's Virginia Museum of the Civil War does become the new site, it takes on the grave responsibility to educate the public and provide a space for reckoning with white supremacy and structural inequality in the commonwealth and the country, even if this means resisting powerful voices to the contrary at its home institution and elsewhere."

Reaction to the VMI vote was mixed, with some decrying it as acquiescence to Youngkin's efforts to appeal to his conservative base and others applauding the decision to provide a new site for the statue.

The Spirit of VMI PAC said in a statement that it "supports the proactive efforts of Gov. Youngkin and the VMI Board of Visitors to find a suitable place for the relocation of Arlington National Cemetery's Confederate Memorial." But it also argued against the planned removal of the memorial from Arlington.

"To remove or destroy the memorial is to dismiss the valor, honor, courage and sacrifices of a major proportion of those embroiled in the tragic maelstrom that was the Civil War," the statement continued. "Destroying, warehousing, or moving any American war memorial is a sacrilege against ourselves. Arlington National Cemetery is not the place for virtue signaling or moral preening; Arlington serves as a call for peace to the living and honor to the fallen brave."

Shah Rahman, a member of VMI's Class of 1997 and one of four alumni who published an online letter in 2020 asking the school to form a diverse commission of alumni and cadets to scrutinize VMI's traditions and tributes and decide which should stay or go, said he was disappointed with the decision because he felt the school had been making significant progress in recent years on issues of race and diversity. Rahman said he was "hoping and praying" that the federal government would not allow the transfer of the statue to VMI to take place.

Placing the statue at the New Market Battlefield site, Rahman said, would "turn that into probably another idol worship ground for some of these white nationalists, white supremacists, whatever you want to call them. It's crazy to me."

He criticized Youngkin for proposing the move, saying that "he has shown time and again since the election that he wants to continue to use VMI as a platform from which he can launch some of this political madness that continues to divide our nation."

Virginia state Sen. Lamont Bagby (D-Henrico), who leads the Virginia Legislative Black Caucus, also decried Youngkin's plans to move the statue to VMI property. "He is throwing bait at what he perceives as his base, but every time he does it he sets the commonwealth back," Bagby said in an interview. "I feel for the individuals at VMI that have put the work in. Because there are individuals at VMI and alumni that were proud of the progress. And what he's doing is just so unfortunate."

Complicating any question of where the monument will go is a lawsuit filed against the Defense Department by the Sons of Confederate Veterans and descendants of Confederate soldiers to keep the monument at Arlington. The federal government sought to dismiss the lawsuit in July, saying the Defense Department was "obligated by statute to implement the recommendation of the Naming Commission to remove the Confederate Memorial."

H. Edward Phillips, a lawyer representing the Confederate descendants, said in a recent interview that his clients would appeal any dismissal of the case up to the Supreme Court.

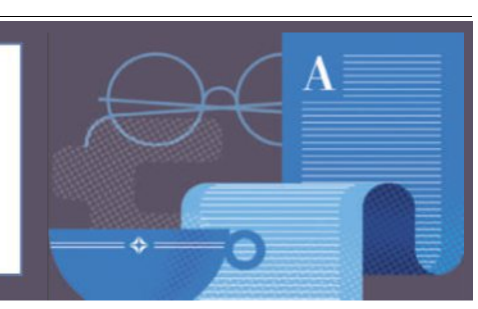

Asked if the monument would still be removed by Jan. 1 if the lawsuit has not been resolved, an Arlington Cemetery spokesperson said they could not comment.

On Maui, healing comes in waves

Some fire survivors see surfing as an escape from uncertainty

BY ELAHE IZADI
IN LAHAINA, HAWAII

Jud Lau knew better than anyone how important it was to get back in the ocean. How you don't think about anything else when you're sitting on a break, waiting for the perfect wave to arrive. ¶ That's what so many people on Maui needed — even a brief reprieve — after the deadly Aug. 8 fire in Lahaina, he said. A week later, the former pro surfer organized a surf day for children displaced by the disaster. ¶ "Surfing can be a great way for people to heal — ocean therapy, saltwater therapy. The ocean is a healing place," said Lau, who shapes custom boards up in Maui's mountains. "A lot of us here, it's all we can think about, what has happened." ¶ Lau found himself unable to sleep, looking up past national tragedies, trying to understand the scope of what happened on the island where he was born and raised. He cited the death toll of Sept. 11, 2001, and the population of New York City. At least 115 people died in Lahaina, but the number of missing people was still unknown. It could be in the hundreds.

Monica Hesse

A man I met once during college casually mentioned that he "didn't read female novelists." No offense intended, he explained, he'd just never come across any that he found particularly interesting. He had either the absolute confidence or the absolute death wish to say this at a reception at a women's college, and I seem to remember that we all stared at him, genuinely confused. What could he possibly mean? Had he never read Octavia Butler? I've been surprised how many times I've heard this sentiment repeated over the years, without embarrassment — and how grateful I've been that it was mostly repeated by people who worked in insurance or pharmaceuticals or some other field where the art they chose to consume, or not consume, really didn't affect anybody but themselves.

Jann Wenner. Sigh.

Jann Wenner is a man whose tastes, preferences and artistic consumption most certainly do have effects: He's the co-founder of Rolling Stone. And on Friday, the New York Times published an incredible interview with him.

The subject of the interview was Wenner's new book, "The Masters," which consists of long-ranging conversations between Wenner and the musicians he finds to be giants in their field, plucked from several decades of Wenner's tenure at Rolling Stone. Luminaries such as Bruce Springsteen, Bono, Jerry Garcia.

The "masters" are all White men. Not a woman or person of color among them. That in itself is noteworthy, but the eye-popping part of the New York Times article happened when the interviewer asked Wenner to explain why.

"Insofar as the women," Wenner responded, "just none of them were as articulate enough on this intellectual level."

The interviewer — David Marchese, doing fantastic work — pushed back hard on this, but Wenner refused to budge. He was looking for musicians who were "philosophers of rock," he explained, and women and Black artists "just didn't articulate at that level." What could he possibly mean? Had he never heard Carole King? He supposed, in retrospect, that he could have "gone and found one Black and one woman artist to include here that didn't measure up to that same*

With strikes, TIFF's stars were the films themselves

BY ANN HORNADAY

TORONTO — In years past, audiences at the Toronto International Film Festival were used to navigating the city's downtown arts district with sharp elbows and even sharper eyes, dodging the throngs of paparazzi and selfie-seekers who descend annually to catch glimpses of the stars walking red carpets on behalf of their latest projects.

Thanks to the ongoing writers and actors strikes in Hollywood, this year the celebrity factor was dialed way down. Yes, Sean Penn and Dakota Johnson showed up for the Canadian premiere of their erotically charged chamber piece, "Daddio." And Sylvester Stallone was on hand, not only for the world premiere of the Netflix documentary "Sly," but also for an exhibition of his paintings at the TIFF Bell Lightbox theater, which played

FASHION

Is it possible for fashion shows to be too upsetting?

BY RACHEL TASHJIAN

NEW YORK — There's maybe nothing better in the world of clothes than a fashion show that makes you uncomfortable. When soothing florals and gowns are considered a statement of empathy in an unforgivingly ugly world, a fashion show that makes you think — and think again, and even change your mind — is a rare thing.

Even if the clothes aren't perfect, these are the kinds of shows that connect fashion to the rest of culture, taking your mind out of the fantasy and into, well, the gutter.

With Ralph Lauren and Michael Kors as the two big names on the agenda, the rest of the week belonged to the indie darlings. Unlike those predecessors, the most significant emerging New York brands center their identity and politics, especially wariness of capitalism and

Tradition rides on thanks to surfboard project

"In a community of 150,000 to 200,000 at most," he said, tears welling in his eyes, voice breaking, "the effects, I think, are just beyond what anyone can even fathom."

What does one do in the face of the unfathomable? The lives lost, traumatizing escapes, homes and livelihoods vanishing in an instant?

Lau didn't know. He just knew surfing. And he knew that, for many people here, a surfboard wasn't just a material possession. He knew of surfers who evacuated Lahaina and took only their boards. Many survivors lost theirs to the flames, he said, meaning they lost a part of themselves. As he put it: "Your surfboard is like part of your soul."

Lau wanted to give people here a small piece of themselves back.

He began soliciting surfboard donations for Lahaina survivors through Instagram, and he and other board shapers on Maui volunteered to sculpt new customs. His Instagram inbox overflowed with messages.

One of those messages came from a mother named Victoria Gladden.

"Aloha I saw your post on surfboards being lost in Lahaina fires," Gladden wrote to Lau. "While we lost a few I was hoping to inquire about 2 surfboards so my daughter and I can get in the water."

She sent a photo of her and her daughter standing on a Lahaina beach, grinning wide.

Lau had no idea how much she needed those boards.

Life in Lahaina, and on the waves

Gladden, 38, was born and raised in Lahaina — a west side girl, through and through.

She went to Lahainaluna High School, where Hawaiian royalty once attended, and she started surfing when she was 18, collecting boards along the way.

For Gladden, who is Polynesian — she is Samoan on her mother's side — surfing was a way to perpetuate Hawaiian culture. It dates back hundreds of years on the islands, but in the 20th century, the famed Hawaiian swimmer Duke Kahanamoku put "surfing on the map" for the modern era, Gladden said. "That was the start, because before that, anything Hawaiian was banned."

Gladden also came to see surfing as the one thing in life that — during that moment — was just for her. "It's just you, your board and the wave you're going to catch. No one else is going to do it for you, except for you."

She helped teach her daughter Brianna, 14, how to surf and similarly find peace in the ocean. But Gladden had to stay off the waves for about a year after she became pregnant and gave birth to her two other daughters, Kai, now 5, and Olivia, now 1.

"Even though you're out where sharks are and you could get pounded in a second, when you're past the break, it just feels safe," Gladden explained recently while holding Olivia on her hip as Kai chanted, "Mommy, mommy," in a singsong voice. "Like, peaceful."

Gladden worked part time at a popular restaurant in the resort area of Kaanapali, north of Lahaina. It overlooked the ocean, her favorite place in the world. She could never imagine living in a place where she couldn't get in the water. "What kind of life would that be?"

She tried to share that love of the ocean with her daughters in other ways. On a recent Sunday at the Maui Ocean Center, they toured the crowded aquarium with extended family after spending the morning at church. Olivia ran through the exhibits, pointing at fish and climbing up rocks as her mother tried to keep up. Kai marveled at the reef and shark exhibits, alternatively holding her cousin's and Brianna's hand.

Gladden picked up Olivia to show her the jellyfish. "They may not know it, but it makes me happy to see them get excited about the ocean and something I love. It feels like I'm passing down knowledge," she said as people squeezed by. "This is a way for me to take them in the ocean" — and, she added with a laugh, "know they're not going to drown."

Despite the hectic scene at the aquarium, this family day was a gift for Gladden, given the traumas of Aug. 8 and after.

Gladden evacuated with everyone who lived in her multigenerational household — her two youngest daughters, mother, grandma and two cousins — hours before fire engulfed Lahaina, and after her sister's neighbors urged them to leave early. Recalling how her grandmother prayed for their safety every day, she burst into tears. They drove north to the hotels in Kaanapali, where much of her family works. Brianna, thankfully, was down in Kihei, where she lives with her father and stepmother.

Jud Lau, above, shapes surfboards at his shop in Haiku, Hawaii. "Surfing can be a great way for people to heal," he said. Lau wanted to give people a small piece of themselves back, so he began soliciting surfboard donations, and he and other board shapers volunteered to sculpt new custom boards.

Gladden had been through wildfires before, so when she evacuated, she didn't prepare to leave for good. She didn't take the years' worth of meticulously kept journals, which she wrote as guidebooks for her daughters. She didn't take the free weights she had collected as part of her fitness journey. She didn't take Brianna's baby blanket. And she didn't take the five boards she had stored in her house, including her auntie's stand-up paddle board, Brianna's hand-me-down boards or her custom, 10-foot longboard she was gifted. She had named it "Big Bertha."

Gladden just packed extra clothes for Kai and Olivia. She neglected to take some for herself.

It wasn't until days later that Gladden drove back down the highway and saw what had happened: Her neighborhood was burned to the ground.

She was left with a mixture of deep gratitude that they could leave in such an orderly way, grief for what was gone and the survivor's guilt so common in the wake of such disasters.

Gladden had lived in her house for only a few years. She felt as if the universe had brought her the perfect place. Her landlord was committed to renting to local people in her hometown, where the cost of living is high. Her home had a yard where she could grow food, a car port, storage, space for her girls and a nearby playground for Kai, who loves playgrounds the way her mother loves the ocean. Gladden's father lived up the road, and her extended family was all nearby.

Gladden didn't fully grasp all that she lost immediately after the fire. She has discovered it along the way.

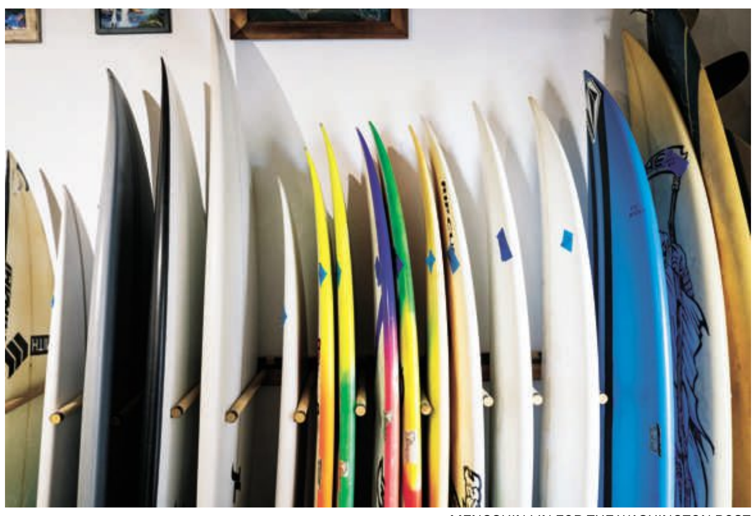

For example: It wasn't until she was scrolling through Instagram one night when she saw Lau's post about giving away surfboards to Lahaina fire survivors when she thought: "Oh, crap. I had five boards."

'Putting mana into the board'

The morning before Lahaina burned to the ground, before everyone on Maui realized how bad it was going to be, Lau was out on the north shore, surfing.

He has been doing it for 30 years. Now 53, Lau has competed professionally, began shaping boards in 2006 and has coached kids. He has helped them perfect their technique in the same Lahaina waves that people desperately flung themselves into on Aug. 8 to escape the flames.

But since the fire, he retreated to his shaping room in Haiku, the town where he lived and worked. On a recent Friday, he shaped an exact copy of a 7-foot-1-inch board that belonged to a fire survivor. He wore a ventilator mask on his face as he gracefully pushed a block along the board's edges, sanding them down. Lau then picked the board up, feeling its weight in his hands and eyeing the shape to determine its symmetry. Classical Hawaiian music — and a lot of white dust — filled the air.

MENGSHIN LIN FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

"It's almost meditative," he said.

He and other shapers donated their labor to make boards for people who couldn't get the right size through donations. An anonymous donor paid for the cost of the materials. In just the first several days of the Surfboard Replacement Project, they equipped fire survivors with dozens of boards. A shipment of donations from Oahu arrived recently.

Lau threw himself into managing the project as survivors and their friends reached out for help. "I feel so thankful that there's something that I have to offer," he said.

But the economic effects of the fire — which led to a sharp drop in tourism — has hit hard on many of those helping. Surfboard shaper Eric Totah, who is lending a hand to build new boards, was also a surf instructor who, on Aug. 8, was supposed to be teaching a class in Lahaina. He lost his primary source of income but remained grateful he still has his waves.

"You almost get baptized every time you go out," he said with a smile.

That was also how Gladden's eldest, Brianna, felt. For her, surfing was a safe place. She felt "just comfortable," she said. "You forget about everything."

A couple of days after Gladden first messaged Lau, he drove down to Kihei to drop off not just one, but three boards for Brianna. They were shocked and moved. "I was so happy, but I feel like I didn't show it," said Brianna, who had been too overwhelmed to come outside. "I was about to cry."

She's a teenager and will need boards that can grow with her, Lau explained. Gladden then received her new, 9-foot-6-inch longboard. She would name it "Stick."

Donated boards may have wear and tear, but they can still serve surfers well. Custom boards are often made with the particular surfer in mind.

Lau liked to picture the recipient riding the board as he smoothed it down. "It's putting mana into the board," he said. A life force, an energy.

Some three weeks after the fire, Lau still hadn't surfed. But as he walked around this board he was making for a fire survivor, he moved his feet the same way long-boarders do while riding waves.

Returning to the wreckage

After her house burned down, Gladden relocated to a vacation condo in Kihei with her two youngest daughters. It was a temporary situation through September, common among so many displaced Lahaina families.

Soon after moving in, she tried to keep Kai from going on the balcony, reading aloud the sign on the door about how the screen door was broken and "to avoid further damage."

"This is not our house," she told Kai, "and I don't want to further damage this place."

As a single mother, Gladden had so many questions to navigate: What should she do about day care for Olivia? Will she have to find a new job if the restaurant doesn't open back up soon? How will she make time to take Kai to the playground?

But she still hadn't seen what remained of her old house. A few weeks after the fire, Gladden drove her three daughters from Kihei to West Maui to visit their extended family, who were all staying at a hotel in Kaanapali.

"Oh, I know that kid!" Brianna said as they drove by someone on the side of the road. Then they passed their old neighborhood. From the highway, they could see the scorched remnants of trees and cars and the crumbling, blackened and gray walls that were once people's homes.

"The playground's not fine," Kai said from the back seat. "Everything looks bad."

"Not everything. Look, the church looks nice," Gladden reassured her.

"The grass got burned a little bit," Brianna added.

"And the gas station looks nice. So not everything looks bad," Gladden said. "But, a lot of things."

"Yeah," Kai agreed.

As they drove, Gladden's sister called to say that sirens were blaring — another fire. Some 10 minutes later, Brianna's phone finally buzzed with the alert. She read it out loud: "'Evacuation order.' Mommy, evacuate."

"Where, please?"

Brianna read the street names and then: "'Evacuate your families and pets now. Do not delay.'"

It was a neighborhood far from the hotels. Their family decided to go to a meeting point, so they could all be together. Gladden reunited with them and other displaced, rattled residents in the hotel lobby, when they heard the fire department had contained the fire and they didn't need to evacuate. "That's what you said last time," someone in the lobby said under her breath.

Videos on social media showed a helicopter dropping water on the hot spot up the hill. The fire was subdued, but Gladden and the girls ditched their plans about staying overnight here and headed back to Kihei.

On the drive back, Gladden wanted to try to see her house. People had been let back in in recent days. It was just three houses down from where National Guard members stood watch.

Gladden had heard a story about a preserved Bible in the wreckage. She wondered whether anything would be left at her house, even if it was just the ashes of her previous life. But the brush fire from before left the National Guard members spooked. They didn't let her through; she needed to be on a list, they said.

She tried again the next day, on the way to take the girls to see their grandpa. She parked on the side of the street while her daughters waited in the car. "Who's coming here? Is that a dump truck?" asked Kai after a big green vehicle parked and let out more National Guard members. "Is that a bus? It looks like a bus."

Gladden returned. They still wouldn't let her in. They were running a protocol, they told her.

She sat in the driver's seat and wondered aloud: Maybe there was some message in this, about not taking the children. But it was their experience, their house, too.

Gladden drove away. She was supposed to start her new semester at college the next day, where she was studying nutrition. Now she worried about losing her financial aid if she didn't go back to school.

"These are just challenges that all kinds of people go through," she said. "But why all at one time?"

She parked the car and began to cry. She felt deep gratitude that she had her children. But there were still parts of life that had felt as if they were hers, and the universe that gave her so much had now taken so much. "Took my town. Took my school, ... everything I care about."

"And I think that's what surfing is," she said through tears. "When I realized my boards were gone, like, another thing taken away from me? What else are they going to do?"

She wept at the steering wheel until her father showed up.

TAMIR KALIFA FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Victoria Gladden makes a quick repair to a surfboard. "It's just you, your board and the wave you're going to catch. No one else is going to do it for you, except for you," she said of surfing.

Going home

Gladden and Brianna took out their new boards, stored at the house of Brianna's father and stepmother, who has been helping Gladden navigate the post-fire chaos.

They were there for a community paddle-out in honor of Lahaina. It was their first time back in the water since the disaster.

Gladden discovered that a piece of wood in the yard had punctured her new yellow longboard. "A little hiccup, but that's not going to stop us," she said with a smile. She patched the hole with a sticker and electrical tape.

"I feel confident," Brianna said, sleep still wearing off as she carried her new bright green board.

When the pair arrived at the cove in Kihei, southeast of Lahaina, they carried the boards to the ocean and threw themselves in.

Gladden came back up for air, water running over her long, black hair, her face breaking into a smile. It was like what Totah had said, about how each time getting back in for a surf is like a baptism.

Mother and daughter paddled out to a circle of about 100 people already sitting on their boards. A man let out a cry, and everyone — including Gladden and Brianna — splashed water in honor of Lahaina.

The pair would spend the morning trading boards, cheering each other on, sharing waves. "Paddle to the right!" Gladden instructed Brianna, who was riding her mother's longboard through the crowded break.

But before Gladden showed her daughter how to navigate this new surf spot, Gladden had to christen her new board with her first wave back.

It happened while all the surfers were still in the paddle-out circle. A long silence took hold, and it felt as if the ceremony was over, so Gladden turned around and paddled away from the group.

The midmorning sun shone on her as she lay prone on her board, her arms slicing the clear, greenish-blue waters.

A man behind her in the circle started a chant in Hawaiian, as the water swelled beneath Gladden.

She paddled with force to stay ahead of the wave forming behind her. Then, she caught it.

Gladden stopped paddling and took to her feet.

She found her legs beneath her, standing with the kind of ease it took years of surfing in Lahaina to achieve. Her hair ran down her back as the wave carried her, moving the board forward the way only the ocean can. She looked ahead.

Gladden wasn't thinking about where she and her daughters would live the following month. Or when she could replace the cellphone she smashed in the car door as she was putting the stroller away. Or the mixture of grief and gratitude the fire left her with. Or how the refrigerator in the vacation rental where they were living wasn't keeping Olivia's milk cold enough. Or whether she would have a job in two weeks.

All of that was waiting for her on the shore.

For now, in this moment, she was just on her board, riding a wave.

historical standard, just to avert this kind of criticism," but he didn't, because, I guess, he refuses to compromise his self-defined standards.

The backlash set in swiftly over the weekend, led by the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame — with which Wenner has been associated since it was first conceived 40 years ago — announcing that it was removing him from its board of directors.

It's fine to like what you like. But if you are Jann Wenner, a man who has been in the position to guide conversations about American pop culture for some 50 years, how sad is it that it turns out that all of the musicians you find most worthy happen to be musicians who look like you?

Not articulate enough on an intellectual level? Cheese and rice, my dude, usually you have to trudge through an incel forum to find that sentiment spoken so loudly. Although he did admit that female musicians might be "creative geniuses," his main complaint seemed to be that they couldn't talk about their art in a way that he found compelling or intellectually stimulating: "Joni [Mitchell] was not a philosopher of rock-and-roll. She didn't, in my mind, meet that test."

It was truly disappointing to read Wenner recycling the tired, harmful idea that including a Black woman in a list celebrating excellence would only be to appease woke crowds, rather than because she deserves to be there. Had he never heard of Tina Turner? It was truly baffling to read him explaining that female artists were simply not articulate. Patti Smith? Stevie Nicks?

And as a journalist, the most noteworthy part of all of this was the fact that it didn't seem to occur to him that maybe it's him, he's the problem. Had he never heard of Taylor Swift? That, if he found brilliant women's answers to be boring, then perhaps he wasn't asking the right questions. That, if he understood "articulate" to mean one particular thing — a thing only embodied by White male artists — then maybe that, in itself, is a boring way to go about understanding music. That historically, artists have been considered great because certain gatekeepers have decided they are great.

Jann Wenner was one of those gatekeepers, shaping culture but also being shaped by culture — a product of his times, and a prisoner of his biases. A guy who had his finger on the pulse of culture, in a certain era, when it was more acceptable for exclusively White men to be rock gods, and exclusively White men to be their high priests.

It would be one thing if Wenner had shrugged and said, "Look, I like what I like, and this book isn't for everyone," and had left it at that.

It's another kind of another thing to blame the people you've excluded for not being intellectually captivating enough to hold your interest.

Rock & Roll Hall of Fame ousts Jann Wenner after his inflammatory remarks

BY LYRIC LI

Jann Wenner, the co-founder of Rolling Stone magazine who also helped found the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame Foundation, has been removed from the hall's board after an interview in which he made comments that were criticized as disparaging female musicians and artists of color.

"Jann Wenner has been removed from the Board of Directors of the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame Foundation," the hall said in a statement released Saturday. The decision was announced a day after Wenner's comments were published in an interview with the New York Times.

In a statement provided to the Hollywood Reporter on Saturday, Wenner apologized for the remarks: "In my interview with The New York Times, I made comments that diminished the contributions, genius, and impact of Black and women artists and I apologize wholeheartedly for those remarks."

The Times interview coincided with the upcoming release of Wenner's book "The Masters," a compilation of his interviews over the years with music greats Bob Dylan, Jerry Garcia, Mick Jagger, John Lennon, Bruce Springsteen, Pete Townshend and U2's Bono — all of whom are White and male.

When asked by Times reporter David Marchese why he did not include female artists or people or color, Wenner, 77, responded, "Insofar as the women, just none of them were as articulate enough on this intellectual level."

He went on to state that female artists such as Joni Mitchell did not meet his criteria to be considered a "philosopher of rock-and-roll."

"She didn't, in my mind, meet that test," Wenner said. "Not by her work, not by other interviews she did. The people I interviewed were the kind of philosophers of rock."

Regarding artists of color, he continued: "Of Black artists — you know, Stevie Wonder, genius, right? I suppose when you use a word as broad as 'masters,' the fault is using that word. Maybe Marvin Gaye, or Curtis Mayfield? I mean, they just didn't articulate at that level."

In the Hollywood Reporter statement on Saturday, Wenner said: "The Masters is a collection of interviews I've done over the years that seemed to me to best represent an idea of rock 'n' roll's impact on my world; they were not meant to represent the whole of music and [its] diverse and important originators but to reflect the high points of my career and interviews I felt illustrated the breadth and experience in that career. They don't reflect my appreciation and admiration for myriad totemic, world-changing artists whose music and ideas I revere and will celebrate and promote as long as I live. I totally understand the inflammatory nature of badly chosen words and deeply apologize and accept the consequences."

Wenner's remarks drew immediate backlash. On social media, commentators resurfaced past criticism of his previous writing and Rolling Stone's coverage of female artists under his guidance.

Wenner founded Rolling Stone in 1967 with Ralph J. Gleason and spent decades at the helm before leaving in 2019. He was also among the group of music and media executives who established the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame Foundation in 1983.

The hall has also been criticized for its relative lack of female and minority inductees, with some recent improvement. According to reporting by the L.A. Times, the 2023 class was the most varied in the organization's history, with women and musicians of color outnumbering White men.

However, among the 719 inductees in all categories as of early 2023, only 61 are women, according to Hopper. Meanwhile, "the percentage of total people of color in the hall has declined every year," down from 55.8 percent in 1989 to 32.7 percent in 2019, pop culture scholar and hall voter Evelyn McDonnell wrote that year.

fears about climate change, in their work. And really, it was a season about growing pains — about which of the designers garnering accolades and sparking conversation online are actually building a real business, in the real world.

But just how bad should fashion make us feel? Hillary Taymour, of Collina Strada, produced a collection that felt joyful but thoughtful, with an underlying message that, even as the environment becomes more and more imperiled, "we continue to put on fashion shows because that's what we know how to do," as Taymour put it.

Less decisive was a highly controversial show on Tuesday, by the 29-year-old designer Elena Velez. She created a rectangular mud pit for her runway, and her models trudged into and through it in their webby corset dresses and ruched tops and skirts, slipping and sliding.

It was evocative and upsetting: I thought of whether this spectacle was too much for a designer to ask of models; I thought of womanhood as a trap; I thought of those early seasons of Yeezy, when Kanye West put his models in hideous but fascinating flesh tone stockings; I thought about a Balenciaga show that was also staged in a pit of mud, and others, like those of the late Alexander McQueen where a model might be assaulted by paint-spraying robots or half-clothed and spattered in blood as a metaphor for England's oppression of Scotland.

During the finale, when the models trudged back out, they began shouting and tackling each other. (Then I thought of how the runway clothes, which are generally meant to be maintained for the magazine shoots and celebrity dressing moments that are crucial to promoting a younger brand, are now covered in mud. Not great for a designer working on a limited budget.)

> All young designers need to compromise. The most interesting thrive when they're navigating that balance.

It was unclear if this was meant to be joyful liberation, or a warning, or Velez's vision of the drowning muck of femininity. There is so much power in an ambiguous fashion show — especially when most designers strive to bang their audiences over the head with obvious ideas. But Velez refused to talk to reporters after the show, instead offering manifesto-style show notes. "It feels to me like the sanitization and unilateralization of womanhood in popular culture today leaves no room for the nuance and multiplicity we deserve as architects of labyrinthine interior lives," she wrote.

The show has been divisive. Fashion commentator Louis Pisano called Velez "the donald trump of emerging designers"; another, Alexandra Hildreth, said Velez once had "such a cool pov on brutalized womanhood" but has now "[made] herself an online scandal." The question Velez has to answer is not how to make "more wearable" clothes, but one that is much larger than the bounds of fashion: How do you do something that gives you stability, resources, support without feeling like you're giving up too much of yourself?

All young designers, who lead with creativity and originality, need to compromise at some point. Possibly even from the beginning. Fashion is about compromise, after all, or better yet, about tension — between what sells and what's interesting, what is provocative and what is direct, what your ambition is and the reality of what you can make. The most interesting designers thrive when they're navigating that balance. Is Velez willing to embrace it?

Maybe she could learn something from Eckhaus Latta. Mike Eckhaus and Zoe Latta have been in the business for over a decade, and their webbed T-shirts, jeans, sensual knits and workwear constitute what many creative people in New York and Los Angeles would consider a uniform. You throw it on and people know you're interesting. Their clothes have gotten sexier since the pandemic, savvily reflecting our growing comfort with our bodies.

But they also look mature — Eckhaus and Latta know their role isn't to dazzle, but to provide solutions and inspiration for cognoscenti who consider it uncool to have major coin. They've done collaborations with Ugg and Moose Knuckles — the kinds of projects that help a brand stay above water — and they've figured out how to do it with integrity.

Their show took place in the lobby of Rockefeller Center, which made for a winky contrast between their enmeshed models and the seductive temple to paper pushing. "We were thinking about the Rockefellers as one of these American families who define capitalism," Eckhaus reflected after his show, adding that the idea wasn't to make a hamfisted statement about it but to see "an interesting tension in it."

There was Raul Lopez, of Luar, who closed the season for the third year in a row. His show was fun, first and foremost — great music, fantastic casting and marijuana smoke filling the air as soon as the lights went down. Lopez makes narratively fabulous clothes; this collection was the tale of two rooms he saw in the Dominican Republic, a church next to a nightclub. Collars were yanked back — as if God or the party gods were pulling you to repent or party.

Though it's clear Lopez would love one of those big plum European fashion house jobs, you could also see him building a Rick Owens-like empire, with his hit-bags and accessories like crazy sunglasses as the foundation, and the sexy fitted clothes an option for those who find Balenciaga too expensive and Martine Rose not femme enough.

Lopez's clothes feel like a celebration of his identity even when there is darkness — poverty, struggle, finding your queer identity in a religious family — on the surface. The same goes for Willy Chavarria, whose extraordinarily elegant clothes (cowboy hats, long shorts, shrunken jackets and white patent dress shoes) are drawn from his Chicano upbringing.

Unlike many other media, fashion is a space where foregrounding one's identity is openly welcome and celebrated; self-promotion is the name of the game, and talking about where and how you grew up, and what it looked like, is a much more generous way to do it. Fashion should be used to talk about these things.

Designers can look at the real world — talking about identity, misogyny, racism, capitalism and the environment — without making their models trudge through the mud. Still, Velez's show is not one that the fashion world will soon forget, or even stop talking about. That alone may be reason enough to send your models and your life's work straight into the dirt.

‘American Fiction’ wins big in Toronto, where the movies did the talking

host to an adoring — and endearing — conversation with the actor on Friday. (Some productions were granted interim agreements by the Writers Guild of America and the Screen Actors Guild-American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, allowing their members to make promotional appearances during the strike.)

But for the most part, this year’s TIFF, which wrapped up with awards announced Sunday, was a far more muted affair — meaning that it allowed an exceptionally strong program of films to succeed on merits alone.

One of the strongest examples is this year’s big winner: “American Fiction,” the movie that won TIFF’s coveted audience award on Sunday. Adapted by first-time filmmaker Cord Jefferson from Percival Everett’s novel “Erasure,” the mordant, generous-hearted satire about race, identity, code-switching and White liberal hypocrisy strikes a perfect balance of warm humor and bracing honesty. (The TIFF audience award is known as a harbinger of good things to come at Oscar time: Such recent best pictures as “Nomadland,” “Green Book” and “12 Years a Slave” were all audience award winners.)

Another buzzy audience favorite, “The Holdovers,” was a runner-up for the award. Alexander Payne’s tenderly funny portrait of an angst-ridden teenager and his grouchy teacher at a boys’ boarding school in the 1970s reunites Payne with his “Sideways” star Paul Giamatti with touchingly appealing results. (The film will hit theaters in late October to early November.)

Both “American Fiction” and “The Holdovers” emerged as favorites early in the festival, as did “Hit Man,” Richard Linklater’s wickedly dark comedy, which features Glen Powell as a mild-mannered college professor who becomes an undercover cop-slash-assassin.

Powell’s performance was revelatory for an actor who took every advantage of being center stage. That can also be said for “American Fiction” star Jeffrey Wright, who plays a novelist and teacher in a long-overdue star turn that, with luck, will garner attention during awards season. TIFF, which comes on the heels of festivals in Venice and Telluride, marks the unofficial start of that dizzyingly aspirational time of year, which, if the SAG-AFTRA strike continues, will look decidedly unlike its predecessors; in Toronto, the stirring biopics “Rustin” (Nov. 3), starring Colman Domingo as civil rights activist Bayard Rustin, and “Nyad” (Oct. 20), starring Annette Bening as long-distance swimmer Diana Nyad and Jodie Foster as Nyad’s friend and coach Bonnie Stoll, were clearly poised to go the distance when it comes to acting nominations.

As undeniably powerful as those performances were, some of the most compelling films at TIFF went one step further, celebrating and often playfully interrogating the notion of performance itself. In “Dream Scenario” (Nov. 10), Nicolas Cage proves just as game playing a professor (academics are apparently this year’s go-to protagonists) who inexplicably starts to show up in strangers’ dreams, a setup that gives filmmaker Kristoffer Borgli a chance to stage all manners of wildly improbable set pieces choreographed around his amusingly deadpan leading man. In “Wildcat,” Ethan Hawke directs his daughter Maya Hawke in a narrative about the novelist Flannery O’Connor — not only as the author, but also as an imagined player in her own stories, staged with ruthless wit and Southern gothic luridness. And Powell, who until now was best known for playing opposite Tom Cruise in last year’s “Top Gun: Maverick,” clearly has a blast channeling his co-star’s cocky bravado throughout “Hit Man,” in which he dons outlandish disguises and personae to catch people in the act of engaging a killer for hire. The result — described by Linklater at a public screening as a “sexy-couple dark romantic comedy date movie” — is indeed all of that, wrapped inside a smartly entertaining deconstruction of one of cinema’s most shopworn tropes.

As of this writing, both “Wildcat” and “Hit Man” were available for acquisition, and they were in good company: Some of the best-received films at this year’s TIFF arrived without distributors, including Christy Hall’s unsettling but compulsively watchable “Daddio”; “Green Border,” Agnieszka Holland’s harrowing drama about refugees enduring unspeakable cruelty as they are shunted between Poland and Belarus; and Azazel Jacobs’s “His Three Daughters.” An exquisitely calibrated domestic drama starring Carrie Coon, Elizabeth Olsen and Natasha Lyonne as sisters caring for a father in hospice, Jacobs’s quiet but potent barnburner turned out to be one of the most impressive films of an already impressive slate.

Not surprisingly for a film about death, “His Three Daughters” addresses rue and regret, themes that thread through several films, serving as a reminder that many of these projects were conceived during the pandemic. Perhaps for that reason, they often reflected on the creative process itself. Ava DuVernay’s “Origin,” adapted from Isabel Wilkerson’s 2020 book, “Caste,” received three ovations when it screened here on Wednesday, in part because of the bold swing the filmmaker took with the material. Rather than deliver a dry, documentarylike recap of Wilkerson’s prodigiously researched history of arbitrary social hierarchies, DuVernay chose to make Wilkerson a character and dramatize the theoretical breakthrough that made it possible for her to reframe race through the transnational and timeless concept of caste.

Played in “Origin” by Aunjanue Ellis-Taylor, Wilkerson struggles through crushing grief — brought on by the killing of Trayvon Martin, and the loss of three close family members — to achieve intellectual and personal catharsis. In “Flipside,” Chris Wilcha’s high-spirited but deceptively profound documentary about his years-long case of auteur’s block, the journey might have looked quirkier, but the stakes were no less serious — especially when it came to overcoming internal and external obstacles to produce something meaningful and, just maybe, transformative. How fitting, then, that TIFF closed with “Sly” (Nov. 3), Thom Zimny’s observant, densely layered portrait of the action star who so perfectly embodies defiance, perseverance and self-creation. Those were the dominating principles at this year’s TIFF in movies that, with few stars on hand, eloquently spoke for themselves.

Thanks to the ongoing writers and actors strikes in Hollywood, this year the celebrity factor at TIFF was dialed way down.

Editor’s note: As the strikes by TV writers and actors continue to strictly limit production of scripted shows, we are putting the TV Highlights column on hiatus. We’ll continue publishing a daily TV schedule.

MUSIC REVIEW

At the Anthem, pioneer Patti Smith uses her voice in more ways than one

BY CHRIS KELLY

After the first few songs of her set Saturday night at the Anthem, it took Patti Smith a few tries to get on track for a cover of "I Had Too Much to Dream (Last Night)," by the Electric Prunes. The singer shrugged off a missed note and had to restart after she got tangled in the lyrics, but neither Smith nor the full house seemed to mind.

"That wasn't real," Smith explained. "That was a slight time warp."

For a few hours Saturday, Smith was the leader of a band of merry time travelers, reaching back through her years spent as the spiritual connection between the Beat Generation and the proto-punks, playing her own songs and those by like-minded sojourners.

During the Electric Prunes cover, Smith turned her missteps into impromptu poetry before the song built to a frenzy. It's a song about a dream of an old lover who evaporates at dawn, to which she added the lyric, "Don't go!"

At 76, Smith has outlived most of the best minds of her generation (and the preceding one): collaborators, friends and lovers to whom she paid tribute during the show, with projections of Robert Mapplethorpe's "Horses" cover portrait; Robert Frank's black-and-white video for Smith's "Summer Cannibals"; her ecstatic reading of Allen Ginsberg's "Footnote to Howl"; a cover of Television's "Guiding Light," in memory of Tom Verlaine, who died earlier this year; and a rousing rendition of her best-known song, "Because the Night," which she wrote about her husband and "eternal boyfriend," Fred "Sonic" Smith, who died in 1994.

Smith has played "Because the Night" more than 1,000 times, but the song's lyrical search for the truth about love and lust is an everlasting one, and her ragged pleadings of "touch me now" grow more sorrowful with each passing year. In kind, Smith's main instrument — the voice through which she has delivered poetry for more than half a century — is stained by time but still potent.

Smith, one of the baby boomers who never gave up the good fight, still has plenty to scream about. Along with remembering the departed, she encouraged the audience to keep in mind the people around the world in need: those affected by flooding in Libya and the earthquake in Morocco, women fighting for human rights in Iran, and workers striking for fairness in the United States. She dedicated "Peaceable Kingdom" to Palestinians, singing, "I wanted to tell you that your tears were not in vain."

During her encore, Smith told a story about seeing Neil Young at the Fillmore East 50-odd years ago and covered his song "After the Gold Rush," which she updated for the times: Mother Nature is still on the run in the 21st century, as it was in the 1970s. As the fight to save humanity from a climate apocalypse continues, so does the struggle for D.C. statehood, a cause Smith noted before her show-ending performance of "People Have the Power." These days, her lyrics about using the vote as a way "to redeem the work of fools" ring hollow; the power to strike feels more resonant. Either way, Smith reminded the crowd: "Use your voice" — a lesson she has never forgotten.

Cy the Cynic allows that it's better to give than to receive. Then you don't have to bother with exchanging the gifts you got.

In today's deal, South's leap to four spades bought the contract, and West led his singleton ace of clubs. East diagnosed the lead and followed with the deuce, his lowest club as a suit-preference signal to show a possible entry in diamonds, the low-ranking side suit.

West duly shifted to a diamond. South took dummy's ace and led a trump to his ace, declining a finesse since West had opened the bidding. But West won the next trump, led a diamond to East and ruffed the club return. Down one.

The danger of a club ruff was clear, so South couldn't let East win a trick before all the trumps were drawn. South should have exchanged one loser for another.

At Trick Three South must lead dummy's king of hearts and discard his last diamond — a loser on a loser. East can never get in, and South loses only one more trick to West's high trump.

You open one heart, and your partner bids one spade. What do you say?

ANSWER: You have a minimum opening bid, worth only one more constructive move. Use it to support partner: Raise to two spades. Say you bid two diamonds instead, and he returns to two hearts or bids 2NT. You must pass, never having shown spade tolerance. True, partner's spades may be poor, but then no good contract may be available.

HOROSCOPE

BIRTHDAY | SEPTEMBER 18

Your personal freedom is important to you, which is why you swing between being with others versus seeking privacy. You are attractive but elusive; devoted and independent. This is a year of learning and teaching for you. Take time to renew your spiritual or religious beliefs. Explore ideas and philosophies.

Moon Alert: After 1 a.m. today, there are no restrictions to shopping or important decisions. The Moon is in Scorpio.

ARIES
(MARCH 21-APRIL 19).
Start this week with the determination to reduce debt or get out of debt. This is the perfect day to draw up a budget. It's an excellent day for discussions about how to deal with inheritances, shared property, taxes, estates and your debt. Get real.

TAURUS
(APRIL 20-MAY 20).
Discussions with partners and close friends will be productive today; however, they will focus on practical, down-to-earth matters. You might discuss how to deal with the division of labor or shared expenses.

GEMINI
(MAY 21-JUNE 20).
You start this week off with a strong desire to be productive and work hard. Today you will impress bosses and authority figures. In turn, they might have wise advice for you or specific instructions about how to finish a job in practical terms.

CANCER
(JUNE 21-JULY 22).
Discussions with parents, teachers and caregivers about the education and care of kids will be practical and productive today. Also, discussions about sports – professional or amateur – will likewise move things along.

LEO
(JULY 23-AUG. 22).
An older family member will have some advice for you today or perhaps some practical assistance. Either way, it will behoove you to listen, because why not stand on the shoulders of those who have gone before you?

VIRGO
(AUG. 23-SEPT. 22).
This is an excellent day to study or learn anything new because your mind is calm and focused. Furthermore, you will not overlook details. You will retain information and hopefully know how to use it in a practical way.

LIBRA
(SEPT. 23-OCT. 22).
Today you will be sensible about money. You might even draw up a budget for yourself (which is not really your style). But even a temporary budget can be a good thing because it's an eye-opener to get a realistic view of your scene.

SCORPIO
(OCT. 23-NOV. 21).
Today the Moon is in your sign dancing with stern Saturn, which gives you a sober, realistic view of life. You're willing to put up with discomfort to fulfill your duties.

SAGITTARIUS
(NOV. 22-DEC. 21).
Research will go well today because you are focused and mentally prepared to dig in and study something. You'll be meticulous and you won't overlook details.

CAPRICORN
(DEC. 22-JAN. 19).
Today you have a willing acceptance of duty. You want to get done whatever it is you want to do. This is why you will set aside frivolous wishes and get down to business.

AQUARIUS
(JAN. 20-FEB. 18).
Be open to listening during discussions with bosses, parents, teachers, VIPs and the police today. This is because authority figures can benefit you with the wealth of their experience. Listen to advice.

PISCES
(FEB. 19-MARCH 20).
This is an excellent day to study because your mind is mentally focused and steady. You are detail oriented and patient enough to finish whatever you begin. You can use this energy to finish a paper, thesis or project, or to make travel plans.

Puppets and Puppets, a mischievous fashion label, is pulling our strings

BY MAURA JUDKIS

NEW YORK — The first models to open the show at Puppets and Puppets were dozens of one-foot-tall plush animatronic dancing cats, rabbits, pandas, raccoons and reindeer. They lined the runway — in a slightly grimy multipurpose space behind a Catholic church in the East Village — as guests walked in. And yes, they were modeling. Some of the cats clutched miniature versions of the purse that made the brand famous: a prim handbag with a fake but real-looking chocolate chip cookie where a logo would ordinarily be.

Puppets and Puppets — the art-school, cool-kid brand co-founded by Carly Mark — is messing with you.

A saxophonist who ordinarily busks on the subway sounded the opening notes of George Michael's cornball hit "Careless Whisper" as the models walked across the linoleum floor. A handle for one of the bags was an oversized spoon. Some dresses had a train in the front, which the models carried in their teeth. One model walked the runway with a faux banana, aging and brown-spotted, slung on leather straps as if it were a cross-body purse.

Not everyone gets the joke. Puppets' work is the type of thing that always inspires "This is fashion?" comments from people who think fashion should be lovely. The thing is: Puppets and Puppets is also lovely. Some of the looks are shimmery cocktail dresses that would look appropriate at the Grammys or an elegant wedding. Humor is dependent on context. Carly Mark is the puppet master, and she's pulling the strings.

"I'm laughing at you," says Mark, "but you're in on the joke."

Mark moved to New York from Detroit in the mid-2000s to attend the School of Visual Arts. She made paintings of Haribo gummy bear bags and sculptures of sex toys. But mostly she floundered around, wondering why living her dream of becoming an artist felt so unfulfilling.

"I spent a decade," she says, "maybe even a little bit more, engaged in the art world in this almost like clenching-my-fist type of way, being like, 'I'm going to figure this out. I'm going to do it. I'm going to be successful.'"

As an art piece, she decided to make a selection of costumes, inspired by consumerism, with Ayla Argentina, who would become a Puppets and Puppets co-founder (and is no longer involved in the brand). The pieces were clownish and a bit grotesque: an overstuffed birthday cake, a half-man-half-tiger in a powder blue suit, a sexy Haribo bear. People told her that she should consider making more.

"I was just like, 'If this goes well, great, I'll keep going,'" Mark says. "If not, I'll write it off as an art piece."

She did not have to write it off as an art piece. The first Puppets and Puppets collection debuted in 2019. The clothing from her first few shows — where models walked the runway in harlequin clown-inspired suits, or egg carton shoes made from plastic foam, or a see-through bodysuit affixed with the type of gold angel wings you might see on a kid's Halloween costume — never went into wider commercial production. But buyers began to ask, and that became its own challenge: How do you turn a jokey art project into an actual business?

"I've learned a lot since I started almost five years ago, but I can't sew," says Mark. "I can't make anything for myself."

Mark had to find employees who understand the production side of the business, which has not yet turned a profit.

"I just start asking around," Mark says. "'Hey, I really need help sourcing fabrics.' 'Hey, I really need help understanding how to budget.' 'I really need help building a financial plan.' And if you just keep asking people, eventually someone shows up."

Bergdorf Goodman and Ssense are now among the retailers that carry Puppets clothes, which sell for between $200 (for a T-shirt) and around $2,000 (for an evening gown).

The cookie bag ($545) has become the brand's most recognizable symbol. It's chic and goofy. The centerpiece is a hyper-realistic resin sculpture of a cookie, with glossy chocolate chips and the wrinkles you'd find in a homemade batch. It's not just a joke, though.

"Yeah, it is this cute thing, it's a cookie on a bag," Mark says. "But I've also kind of tricked you because it's a fake fake. … It's talking about logos and it's talking about handbags and it's talking about fashion in this very actually cerebral way. … It's actually kind of like a punk object. Like, there is something kind of of gothic style about it."

There are other variations on the bag, with roses, a banana, a fried egg, and — in the newest collection — a spider.

"I think of [the bags] in a sculptural way," she says. "I think of them in a cinematic way. I think of them in terms of how I used to decide to make a painting."

Puppets and Puppets is named after Mark's beloved Chihuahua, Puppet, but it's a name with multiple layers. Models are puppets that designers manipulate, and consumers are, too. The term puppet master — which the brand has emblazoned on shirts, and Mark has tattooed on her body — is a reference to a character in the film "Ghost in the Shell," and she likes the duality of how it can represent something playful and also sinister.

Playful and sinister can describe Mark's work, too. She frequently references horror films. There's a lot of gothy black. And there are visual jokes, like the time Mark sent a model down the runway in a bra designed to look as if there were two sunny-side-up eggs covering her breasts.

"Carly is curious, twisted, laser-focused, hilarious, unfussy, nerdy, and also just super hot," says the singer Caroline Polachek, a friend, via email. "She's not interested in being cool, which of course makes her actually cool."

Lately, the brand has been experimenting with prints that come from AI-generated images, which also came from a joke. During a meeting, an assistant asked who would be making a line of their T-shirts, referencing a company that was a potential partner. But Mark replied with absurdist humor: "I was like, 'It's my boyfriend. He lives in his basement with his parents. He makes our T-shirts and he loves metal.'"

For fun, they fed the prompt "Basement New Jersey metal boyfriends living with parents" into Midjourney, an AI program, which generated a print Mark loved: a selection of long-haired, bearded, middle-aged guys in skull T-shirts standing in their unkempt basements, with walls covered in metal posters. It appears on several pieces this season.

"It's really amazing to be able to see something in your head," she says, "and verbalize that to a computer, and they spit it back out at you, but in a very dreamlike state."

That dreamlike state carried over into the show, where a confluence of characters were waiting to see what Puppets came up with for its spring/summer season. In one corner, the filmmaker Miranda July was making a fake sponsored video post for Gorton's fish sticks. In another, Rebecca Black — remember that viral song "Friday?" — vamped for photos in a black gown. Consider the vast gap in coolness between Ella Emhoff, talking to friends with dyed-pink eyebrows and neon green skateboards, and her hovering Secret Service protection, who tried to blend in as much as possible by wearing a polo shirt — which actually stuck out.

Actress Julia Fox, wearing a snakeskin jumpsuit in the front row, praised Mark as a "visionary." Up by the top of the runway, actress Tallulah Willis (daughter of Bruce) and model Alana Hadid (sister of Gigi and Bella) were chatting with Instagram-famous fashion dog Tika the Iggy, an Italian greyhound, and her human, Thomas Shapiro.

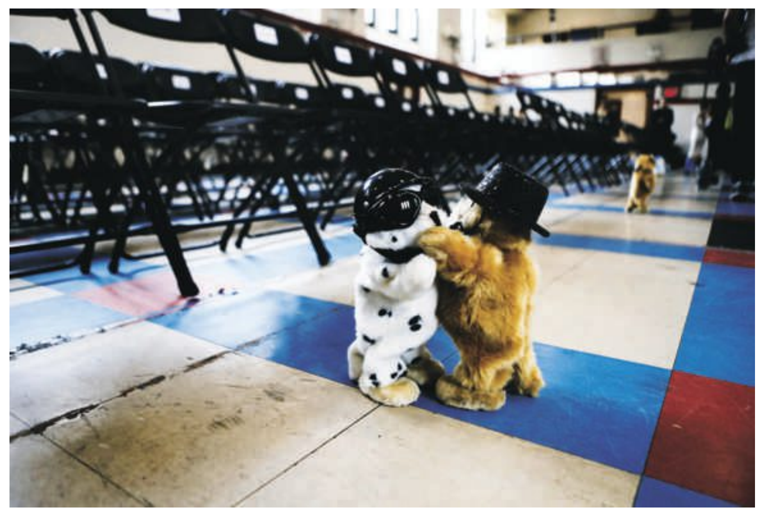

Puppets has "excitement and whimsy," says Hadid. When she walked in and saw the animatronic animals, "I was like, hell, yeah."

Models stomped the runway in sequiny dresses and extra-wide-legged pants with hoodies. One dress featured a picture of a unicorn — not the cute, rainbow, sparkly kind, but the creepy, medieval kind.

After the models took their final walk, Mark emerged from backstage in a T-shirt with her AI metalhead boyfriend print. The applause was rapturous. In this audience, everyone got the joke.

Adapted from an online discussion.

Dear Carolyn: I have two daughters. "A" is 16, a junior in high school. "B" is 15, a freshman. B showed a gift for music at a young age. We encouraged her gift, and she works incredibly hard. When B was in junior high, she outgrew the resources we had in our town. B was accepted into a performing arts high school on partial scholarship, but this required a move to a new city. My husband and I got approval to work remotely from the new city, A is attending the public high school, B is at the performing arts school. B is absolutely thriving at her new school.

At a concert, A met a boy in B's section and they started dating. B has the kind of focus and intensity that a lot of gifted people have, which makes them really wonderful at their gift but not always able to see the big picture. B sees this relationship as a threat to her music and wants A to break up with him and date somebody at her own school. A refuses. A and B are now engaging in verbal barbs constantly, and it's getting very difficult to live with. My husband just ignores them and says they're "doing teenage stuff." I think this is way beyond normal teenage arguments and there are some very hurt feelings. I want to talk to the girls separately and together about this. My husband refuses to, but also won't stop me if I try. Do I talk to them, or just let it play out?

— Parent

Parent: Firmly to B: "You do not get to tell other people who they can date. Not your sibling, not anybody. You don't have to like it, but you don't get to decide."

Nip the bud of this egocentric thinking immediately. B already feels the power of moving an entire family to serve her interests. This happens sometimes, and can be for good reasons, but it still introduces an urgent need for balance when the opportunities for it arise organically, lest your household fall under the tyranny of her "gift." This is one of those opportunities. Tell the tail it does not wag this dog.

To A, the only talking to is, "I have made it clear to B this is not her business, and my advice for you now — and my request — is not to engage when she oversteps into your business." And: "Stay out of hers, too. No payback." (Full accounting for adolescent tastes.)

So, yeah. Good luck.

A reader's thought:

• You reeeeaaaaalllly need to take a step back and evaluate how you treat and view your kids in general. You have allowed one daughter's needs to determine a whole lot of choices about what your entire family does — which, given her gifts, isn't inherently a bad thing, but which does mean you need to make sure you're showing your other child you value her as well. Instead, you're bending over backward to justify your younger daughter's incredibly inappropriate response to this situation by framing it as just a part of her giftedness. It sounds as though your older daughter has gone along with all this without complaint. If you want her to spend time with you willingly 10 or so years down the road, you need to view her as someone equally as important as your musician.

In wee hours in Colorado, rivals staged instant classic

CHUCK CULPEPPER

If, in some other year, you sat up well past 2 a.m. in the U.S. Eastern time zone watching Colorado vs. Colorado State, you probably had an affiliation to one of the schools, a relative on one of the teams, a bet, a problem such as insomnia or tedium, or a college football fandom so intricate as to cry out for meditation or yoga.

If, on this past Saturday night here in 2023, you did likewise, lucky you.

The potential power of one person has never gotten a ride any more vivid than with Coach Deion Sanders at Colorado, from a spring game mind-bogglingly sold out in April to a September of booming TV ratings to a rivalry game with bleary eyeballs gripped into a saga.

Now Sanders's Colorado, with one of the loudest 2-0 records ever, trailed less-resourced Colorado State from up the road 28-17 with eight minutes left. It trailed Colorado State 28-20 with three minutes left and the Rams peeling off one first down and then another first down to lurk one more first down from a lifetime dreamscape. It trailed after so much noise and so much buildup that included, as defensive back Shilo Sanders told reporters in Boulder, "Lil Wayne over here [leading the team onto the field], 'Coach Prime' doing his thing, a whole animal running around [Ralphie, the buffalo mascot] and [the Buffaloes] winning right now and . . . so many cameras on everybody, I would have been so scared [as an opponent] about it."

It trailed after its usual

Commanders' season is about Howell. The early returns are looking good.

DENVER — The Washington Commanders won Sunday for a thousand-and-one reasons, resilience and perseverance highly ranked among them, last-second good fortune not to be overlooked. But this season on the football field is about Sam Howell until it isn't. And after two wins in two weeks, the second-year quarterback not only remains the central character, but buying in feels right.

Howell wasn't perfect in Sunday's come-from-behind, down-to-the-last-play 35-33 victory over the Denver Broncos at Empower Field. He won't be perfect next week against Buffalo or the following week at Philadelphia, tough tasks both. But being perfect isn't the assignment. That would be growing each week. That would be getting up when he's knocked down. That would be showing he's the quarterback for 2024 and

Robinson sparks Washington offense in down-to-the-wire comeback win

BY NICKI JHABVALA

DENVER — The Washington Commanders trailed by 18 points in the second quarter against the Denver Broncos on Sunday, but the message on the sideline was simple.

"Everybody's telling each other, 'It's one play,' " left tackle Charles Leno Jr. said. "All it takes is one play."

One positive play to reverse course after a string of bad ones. Because whatever could have gone wrong for the Commanders early on against the Broncos did. Quarterback Sam Howell was sacked three times — once on each of Washington's first three drives — and had a pass deflected to sputter the fourth drive.

Washington's defense was ripped apart at the edges with outside runs and deep balls up the middle from Broncos quarterback Russell Wilson.

Missed tackles? There were plenty.

Missed assignments? Just as many.

Orioles pass another test, clinching a playoff berth

Series split has Baltimore two games up in AL East

BY CHELSEA JANES

BALTIMORE — An uncertain assembly of Baltimore Orioles in ski goggles and still-creased orange T-shirts slowly formed a circle, the players holding champagne bottles in their hands, waiting for a signal. Then, from the corner, came a pop. Then, from nearer the middle, another. Then another.

"You guys got to relax," Aaron Hicks said, chuckling quietly as he ambled toward them like a proud and knowing uncle. "You're not supposed to pop them yet."

Hicks had his fair share of celebrations during his days with the New York Yankees. But almost everyone else in the Orioles' clubhouse is still new to the norms of celebration choreography. The Orioles clinched their first postseason berth in seven seasons Sunday, their first since Mike Elias took over as general manager and led them through a lengthy rebuild and into a long-awaited era that is supposed to include at least a handful more.

The celebration was just about the only time this year the Orioles have looked out of place on an unfamiliar stage. They entered this weekend's four-game series with the Tampa Bay Rays aware that it was the most important series played at Camden Yards in years — and in most of their young careers. And they left it with a gritty split and a two-game lead in the American League East with two weeks to play.

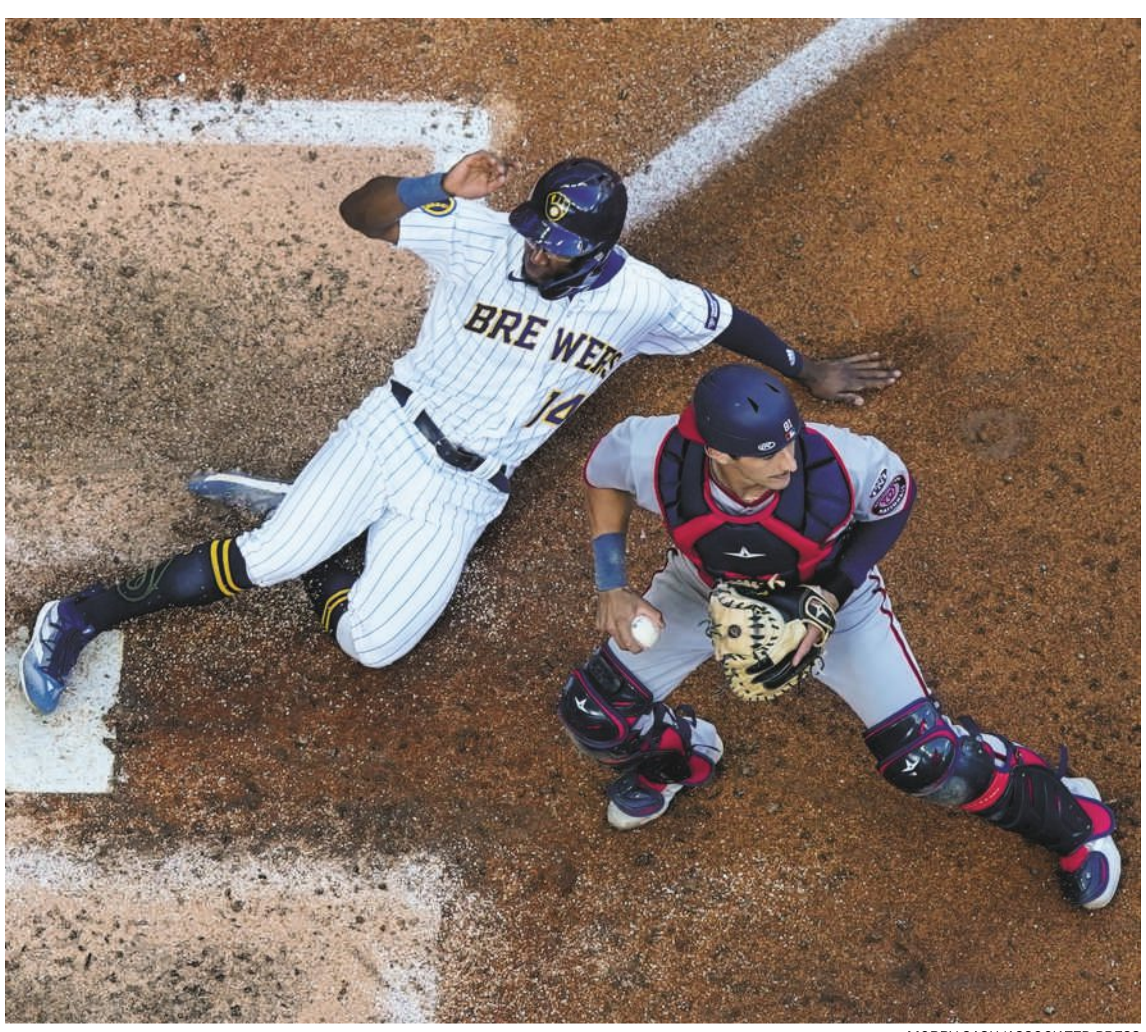

Technically, they clinched the playoff berth with two outs in the bottom of the ninth and the tying run on first Sunday. They were losing when the Texas Rangers lost to the Cleveland Guardians several hundred miles away, providing the mathematical end to Baltimore's drought.

But within an hour, they had rallied in the ninth and the 10th to beat the Rays and earn their MLB-leading 47th comeback win. For four days this weekend, the Orioles played under unprecedented pressure and hard-earned national scrutiny. By the end of it all, they were celebrating, having passed all available examinations again.

"This is the first step," Orioles Manager Brandon Hyde told his team as a few more corks popped around him. "We're going to keep doing this."

MILWAUKEE — For most of the Washington Nationals' season, Michael Chavis has been on the periphery. He has been an exuberant presence, handing out popcorn, wearing fuzzy slippers around the home clubhouse and emitting laughs that can be heard throughout it.

But on the diamond, he has been seldom used, mostly as a pinch runner in the final innings. He wasn't a lock to make the team out of spring training yet earned a spot in part because of his versatility. On Sunday afternoon, the oft-overlooked piece of the Nationals became the center of attention.

Chavis stretched out with every inch of his 5-foot-10 frame to make a diving stop with runners on the corners in the 11th inning of a one-run game against the Milwaukee Brewers. He tagged first base, then threw to home to catch William Contreras between third and home. Drew Millas chased Contreras back

Trossard's late score is enough for Arsenal

ARSENAL 1, EVERTON 0

Associated Press

It wasn't pretty or exciting Sunday, but Arsenal's 1-0 win at Everton was just the kind of game that English Premier League title challenges can be built on.

A classy 69th-minute shot by substitute Leandro Trossard sealed the three points and lifted the level of quality against a limited Everton team playing spoiler at home.

It was a third straight 1-0 loss for Everton at Goodison Park this season amid prospective new American ownership for the club.

Arsenal was the only team in action Sunday to score, after Chelsea misfired in a 0-0 draw at Bournemouth.

Chelsea has just one win in five league games and is 14th in the league standings — one place below Manchester United and one above Bournemouth, which has yet to win.

Arsenal's Trossard entered the game unexpectedly early when Gabriel Martinelli was injured within a minute of play restarting after he thought he had given Arsenal the lead in the 19th. It was ruled out by an offside spotted on video review.

The victory kept Arsenal level with Tottenham and Liverpool, trailing two points behind defending champion Manchester City at the top of the standings.

• SPAIN: Real Madrid remained perfect in La Liga after it rallied again for a 2-1 win over Real Sociedad.

Federico Valverde and Joselu scored early in the second half at Santiago Bernabeu Stadium to give Madrid its fifth straight victory to start the league season.

The only team still with a perfect record, Madrid has a two-point lead over second-place Barcelona, which has won four in a row after opening with a draw.

• FRANCE: U.S. forward Folarin Balogun's first goal for Monaco was not enough as the Ligue 1 leader conceded a last-gasp equalizer in a 2-2 draw at Lorient.

Monaco is one point ahead of Brest, which moved up to second place after rallying to win, 2-1, at Reims. Midfielder Pierre Lees-Melou grabbed the winner in the 56th minute.

• ITALY: Romelu Lukaku and Paulo Dybala looked powerful in their first match together as they helped Roma crush newly promoted Empoli, 7-0, in Serie A play. Dybala netted twice, and Lukaku scored his first goal in his second match since joining from Chelsea.

• MLS: Felipe Mora had a goal and an assist as the Portland Timbers snapped an eight-match winless streak on the road with a 2-1 victory over Austin FC.

• NWSL: Adriana had a goal and an assist as the host Orlando Pride held on for a 2-1 win against the North Carolina Courage. . . .

The Chicago Red Stars came from behind twice to earn a 2-2 draw against Angel City in Bridgeview, Ill.

ACES 92, SKY 70

Associated Press

A'ja Wilson set a playoff career high with 38 points to help the defending champion Las Vegas Aces finish off a first-round sweep of the visiting Chicago Sky with a 92-70 victory Sunday.

The Aces, who beat Chicago, 87-59, in the first game of the best-of-three series, will play either the No. 4 seed Dallas Wings or the fifth-seeded Atlanta Dream in the semifinals. Game 1 will be played in Las Vegas next Sunday. The Wings lead their series 1-0, with Game 2 on Tuesday in Dallas.

Wilson sank 15 of 23 shots from the field and made 8 of 10 from the free throw line. She added 16 rebounds for her first double-double this postseason after notching six in last year's championship run.

Jackie Young pitched in with 15 points, six assists, five rebounds and three steals. Alysha Clark totaled 14 points and six rebounds, and Kelsey Plum scored 10 points.

Wilson had 10 points, Young scored seven and Las Vegas took a 23-14 lead after one quarter and never looked back. Wilson, the No. 1 overall pick in the 2018 draft, had 19 points and nine rebounds by halftime, and the Aces led 44-29.

ETHAN MILLER/GETTY IMAGES

A'ja Wilson (38 points, 16 rebounds) and the Aces had Elizabeth Williams and the Sky looking for answers in a two-game sweep.

Las Vegas finished 5-0 against the eighth-seeded Sky this season.

Kahleah Copper had 25 points and 10 rebounds to lead Chicago. Dana Evans came off the bench to score 22 points, and Marina Mabrey added 15 points.

The Sky shot 38.5 percent after a 33.3-percent effort in Game 1.

• LYNX 82, SUN 75: In Uncasville, Conn., Kayla McBride scored 28 points and Napheesa Collier added 26 points and 13 rebounds as Minnesota defeated Connecticut to force a deciding Game 3 of their first-round playoff series.

Alyssa Thomas scored 26 points and DeWanna Bonner added 24 for the third-seeded Sun, which won the first game of the series by 30 points but now must win a road game Wednesday to advance.

"We love our fan base, and we do feel like that's an advantage for us," Collier said.

The Lynx led by six points at halftime and stretched that to 16 with the help of a 12-0 run in the third quarter, highlighted by the fifth of McBride's six three-pointers. Her layup made it 65-49.

But the Sun responded with a run of its own and trailed only by 65-60 entering the fourth quarter.

A three-pointer from Bonner cut the lead to 76-73 with 2½ minutes to play, but the Lynx made several big defensive stops and scored the next six points to put the game away.

Connecticut, which shot 16 for 30 from beyond the arc in Game 1, hit just seven of it 20 attempts Sunday, while Minnesota, led by McBride, was 9 of 24.

Both teams had injury scares in what was a physical game.

Bonner had 18 points before taking an elbow to the nose late in the third quarter with the Sun trailing by five points.

Collier also was injured earlier in that quarter and also spent a short time in the locker room after leaving the court holding her lower back.

The Sun is looking to advance to the semifinals for the fifth consecutive season after winning a team-record 27 games during the regular season.

Sun's White is coach of year

Stephanie White was honored as the WNBA's coach of the year after guiding Connecticut to its winningest regular season and a No. 3 seed in the playoffs.

White, the former Indiana Fever and Vanderbilt coach, took over a team that made it to last year's Finals before coach Curt Miller left for the Los Angeles Sparks; star player Jonquel Jones, a former league MVP, was traded to the New York Liberty; and point guard Jasmine Thomas left to join her former coach out west.

The team also had to deal with a season-ending injury to key player Brionna Jones a month into the season.

White received 36 votes from a national panel of 60 sportswriters and broadcasters. Latricia Trammell of Dallas finished in second place with 11 votes, and Sandy Brondello of New York was third with six.

relentless hunt around the country and the WiFi, just hoping and aching for some useful disrespect, had seen the country hurl some perceived disrespect smack into Colorado's lap, in the form of Colorado State Coach Jay Norvell's comment about Deion Sanders wearing sunglasses and hats when among adults.

"Truthfully," Coach Sanders told reporters in Boulder, "at one point in the game, I said: 'We can't let this dude win. There is no way we let this dude win. The press conference is going to be unbearable if we let this dude win.' "

"It's like, I'm not going to be able to live with myself with a loss like that," his son and quarterback Shedeur Sanders said. "I wouldn't be able to sleep. I just didn't want to go through that."

"I think we were just out there fighting for hats and sunglasses," said Sanders's other son on the team, Shilo.

What wee-hour TV.

This would take a college football day stuffed with the usual goodies — from Harrison Mevis's banger of a 61-yard field goal to beat No. 15 Kansas State for Missouri; to Washington's shiny excellence in mauling Michigan State; to Florida's spring from dormancy in felling No. 11 Tennessee; to Boston College fans looking unusually, enviably crazed as the Eagles threatened No. 3 Florida State; to South Alabama's happy trip to Oklahoma State, as in 33-7, upset-romp happy — and this would throw it aside and render it secondary.

Colorado trailed 28-20 with 2:06 left when a marvel of an inelegant pooch punt from one of those deft Australians, Colorado State's Paddy Turner, quailed to the ground and wandered out of bounds at the Colorado 2-yard line.

It did not end up at the 3.

It ended up at the 2, demanding a drive of 98, a number known in the bones of Coloradoans ever since Jan. 11, 1987, when John Elway steered the Broncos that distance in Cleveland to send the AFC championship game to overtime. Elway took 15 resolute plays, and now Shedeur Sanders handed to Dylan Edwards, who gained two yards to the 4. "In my own mind I was thinking about [Tom] Brady," Shedeur Sanders said of a 46-year-old who has lent Sanders advice. "He does it all the time, and I got to be able to do it. Just talking to him and representing him in that way."

So his arm, his capacity to move to corral more time to throw, his underrated ability to refrain from unwise plays . . . it all kicked in. Sanders passed 11 yards up the middle to tight end Michael Harrison. He passed 18 yards to the left to Tar'Varish Dawson. He threw one of his mere nine incompletions out of 47 passes. From his own 33-yard line, he passed 26 yards up the middle to Xavier Weaver. After a false start, he passed six yards to Edwards. After an illegal motion, he passed 30 yards up the left sideline to Jimmy Horn Jr., who made a hell of a move to travel the last 15 yards and burrow into the end zone.

The 98 yards had taken eight plays, 90 seconds and several million held breaths. Sanders floated one to an open Harrison for the two-point conversion.

This rivalry that matters to one state — and sometimes not much more than somewhat even there — mattered across the land somehow, what with the power of one and all. Colorado's 43-35 double-overtime win on its way to Oregon at 3-0 came stuffed with a bouquet of delights.

They ranged from Rams tight end Dallin Holker's great low catch of a short pass on third and seven that became a 35-yard touchdown for a 28-17 lead; to Harrison's two overtime touchdowns (plus that regulation two-point conversion); to Rams quarterback Brayden Fowler-Nicolosi, whose game Shedeur Sanders called "great"; to Shilo Sanders's 80-yard interception return, during which he pondered high-stepping like his father used to do (but abstained); to Rams wide receiver Tory Horton's 16 catches for 133 yards. It had thuds such as Colorado State's 17 penalties for 187 yards, including one near the beginning, Henry Blackburn's late hit on two-way Colorado star Travis Hunter that sent Hunter to the hospital, and one near the end, an illegal block that wiped out a Colorado State touchdown in the second overtime.

That last one even came across as questionable, thereby fulfilling one of sports fans' favorite pastimes, the questionable call.

"They drove the length of the field," Norvell said, "so you've got to give them credit for that. I just — we fell a little bit short." He said, "There was nothing left on the sheet that we didn't call."

The coaches' handshake, around 2:30 a.m. Eastern time, looked cordial as Norvell explained his intent of addressing his own team (even as the quote had begun, "I don't care if they hear it in Boulder"). Then the show went on postgame, if you looked, as when Deion Sanders said: "Shedeur has been there. You guys just haven't seen him, because he was at an HBCU [Jackson State with his father, his first two years]. And we were secluded. I guess no one had TVs, and they didn't work out here. But that's who he is, no matter where he came from. That's who that guy is. His passion, his study habits and commitment to excellence show every weekend. I know many people who wait for him to fail as if he can't keep this going. But he can keep going because this is who he is."

He had taken Coloradoans on another 98-yard drive, one of less significance than the predecessor but maybe even more noise, and it didn't even matter all that much that the Buffaloes had to do that to withstand a program that lost, 50-24, to Washington State in its home opener or that spent the past four full seasons going 3-9, 4-8, 3-9 and 3-9. In a country that reveres celebrity, here came another heaping plateful, capped with Deion Sanders wondering whether one spectator, Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson, might tap his 390 million Instagram followers for $1 each so "we'd have no problems with the NIL" or Coach Prime's mention of who gave — and excelled at — one of the pregame speeches.

Babcock is out as coach of the Blue Jackets

Less than three months after he was hired as coach of the Columbus Blue Jackets, Mike Babcock resigned Sunday amid an NHL Players' Association investigation into allegations that he demanded access to players' phones and scrolled through their personal photos.

"This was a difficult decision on everyone's part, but one we felt necessary to ensure our focus remains on the players and the team's upcoming season," Blue Jackets General Manager Jarmo Kekalainen said in a statement.

Pascal Vincent, who had been the Blue Jackets' associate head coach for the last two seasons, will replace Babcock as head coach, just three days before the start of training camp.

"Our players deserve to be treated with respect in the workplace. Unfortunately, that was not the case in Columbus," NHLPA executive director Marty Walsh said in a statement. "The club's decision to move forward with a new head coach is the appropriate course of action."

Babcock's hiring was announced July 1. On Sunday, he handed in his resignation after a five-day probe into the allegations.

"Upon reflection, it has become clear that continuing as head coach of the Columbus Blue Jackets was going to be too much of a distraction," Babcock said in a statement.

The main focus of the investigation was on Babcock's meetings with the younger players, according to Sportsnet's Elliotte Friedman.

CYCLING

A decade later, the United States has a Grand Tour winner again.

Sepp Kuss, 29, won the Spanish Vuelta to become the first American to win one of cycling's top races since Chris Horner won the Vuelta in 2013. The other Grand Tour events are the Giro d'Italia and the Tour de France.

Kuss had effectively secured the victory ahead of Sunday's largely ceremonial stage, when rivals in Madrid respected his lead and did not launch any attacks as per cycling tradition.

"It's incredible," said Kuss, who took the lead in the eighth stage and never relinquished it. "It's still sinking in; I think it's going to take quite some time."

It was a surprising victory for Kuss, a 29-year-old from Durango, Colo., who entered the race in a supporting role to Jumbo-Visma teammates Jonas Vingegaard and Primoz Roglic, who finished second and third, respectively.

Alpecin-Deceuninck rider Kaden Groves prevailed in the final sprint to win the last stage.

TRACK AND FIELD

Sweden's Armand Duplantis set a new world record in the pole vault with a leap of 6.23 meters (20 feet 5¼ inches) at the season-ending Prefontaine Classic meet in Eugene, Ore.

Duplantis broke his own mark of 6.22 meters (20 feet 4¾ inches) that he set indoors this year. It was the second world record set at the two-day meet. Earlier in the day, Ethiopia's Gudaf Tsegay broke the world record in the women's 5,000 meters, finishing in 14:00.21.

Tsegay bested the record of 14:05.20 set by Kenya's Faith Kipyegon this year in Paris.

Canadian Andre De Grasse, the 200-meter champion at the Tokyo Olympics, won the event in 19.76 seconds, and world champion Shericka Jackson of Jamaica won on the women's side in 21.57.

Norway's Jakob Ingebrigtsen, who won the mile Saturday, edged Ethiopia's Yomif Kejelcha in the 3,000 meters, crossing first in 7:23.63.

American Joe Kovacs won the men's shot put, ahead of native Oregonian and world record holder Ryan Crouser.

No. 13 Alabama is out of the top 10 of the Associated Press poll for the first time in eight years, and Georgia remains No. 1.

Georgia received 57 first-place votes in the AP top 25. Michigan held at No. 2 with two first-place votes, and No. 3 Texas flipped spots with No. 4 Florida State. The Longhorns received three first-place votes, and the Seminoles got one.

After scraping by South Florida on Saturday, Alabama (2-1) saw its streak of consecutive AP poll appearances ranked in the top 10 snapped at 128. That was the second-longest such streak in the history of the poll behind Miami's 137 from 1985 to 1993.

After No. 5 Southern California, the rest of the top ten features Ohio State, Penn State, Washington, Notre Dame and Oregon. . . .

Clemson wide receiver Cole Turner will miss the rest of the season after tearing three abductor muscles in a win over Florida Atlantic on Saturday. . . .

Bowling Green linebacker Demetrius Hardamon was in stable condition and cleared to walk a day after an orthopedic injury led to him being placed on a backboard and onto a stretcher before being carted off the field during a 31-6 loss at Michigan.

Dallas plays another complete game

BY SCHUYLER DIXON

COWBOYS 30 JETS 10

ARLINGTON, TEX. — CeeDee Lamb went into the home opener for the Cowboys without new sidekick Brandin Cooks, who injured a knee in his Dallas debut a week earlier.

The team's No. 1 receiver didn't need a lot of help.

Lamb set up both of Dak Prescott's touchdown passes with big plays, Brandon Aubrey kicked five field goals in the 28-year-old rookie's home debut, and the Cowboys beat the New York Jets, 30-10, on Sunday.

Zach Wilson threw three interceptions in his first start since Aaron Rodgers's season-ending Achilles' tendon injury as the Cowboys (2-0) finished a season-opening sweep of the New York teams.

Dallas opened with a 40-0 rout of the NFC East rival Giants, while the Jets (1-1) were coming off an emotional overtime win over Buffalo after Rodgers was injured on the fourth snap of his New York debut.

"I like how we've done it in different ways, so that's good," Dallas owner Jerry Jones said. "I do feel very good about that. I think we've seen a lot of the fundamentals of our team, special teams, offense, defense, certain things that we've put in. We're trying, we're using them."

Lamb was high on the list this time.

The fourth-year wide receiver tied a career high with 11 catches, including a 25-yarder over Tony Adams that set up tight end Jake Ferguson's four-yard touchdown grab on the first possession after Dallas took the ball on the coin flip instead of deferring.

The next big one was a 20-yarder on a drive that answered Garrett Wilson's 68-yard touchdown catch, when Lamb hung on despite landing on a shoulder after getting upended by Adams, who injured a hamstring on the play and didn't return.

Rookie tight end Luke Schoonmaker's first career touchdown followed from the 1 after Brandin Echols was called for pass interference in the end zone.

Prescott targeted Lamb so much — 13 times, two shy of his career high — it was almost one too many. Ahmad "Sauce" Gardner stepped in front of one of the throws and would have had a pick-six to put the Jets in front before halftime, but the ball slipped through his hands.

"I know what I'm capable of doing and the things I'm pretty good at it," said Lamb, whose longest catch — a 31-yarder — set up the first field goal from Aubrey. "The show isn't over. I'm still going week in and week out. I'm proving it to myself and proving it to my guy that I'm one of the best."

Tennessee's long wait for win is over

BY TERESA M. WALKER

TITANS 27, CHARGERS 24 (OT)

NASHVILLE — The Tennessee Titans finally got a much-needed sigh of relief.

Actually, two.

They have a reliable kicker, and that eight-game skid going back to November is over.

Nick Folk kicked a 41-yard field goal in overtime in a sudden downpour, and the Titans beat the Los Angeles Chargers, 27-24, on Sunday.

"I get to put the cherry on top," the 16-year veteran kicker said of his 13th career game-winning field goal.

The Titans (1-1) hadn't won since Nov. 17 at Green Bay last season, a skid that cost them a third straight AFC South title.

On Sunday, they had to rally in their home opener from an 11-point deficit in which the Chargers had more points than Tennessee had yards (eight).

"We needed it," Titans Coach Mike Vrabel said.

Ryan Tannehill rebounded from the worst game of his career in the opener by throwing for 246 yards and put Tennessee up 24-21 with a four-yard touchdown pass to Nick Westbrook-Ikhine. He also ran for a touchdown and started the game-winning drive with a 49-yard toss to Chris Moore.

"Obviously wanted to come back and play well today after last week, so excited to be able to do that," Tannehill said.

Derrick Henry had 80 yards and also ran for a touchdown.

The Chargers (0-2) are mired in their first winless start since 2017, when they lost their first four games in both their first season in the Los Angeles area and first with then-coach Anthony Lynn.

Justin Herbert threw for 305 yards and two touchdowns to Keenan Allen. With the ball and 2:22 left in regulation, he was sacked by Harold Landry, prompting the Chargers to settle for Cameron Dicker's third field goal of the game to force overtime.

The Chargers won the coin toss. But Herbert threw three straight incompletions as Tennessee forced just its third three-and-out of the game.

"We had a tough time protecting the passer today and just didn't do well enough in that phase to give us a chance to earn overtime," Chargers Coach Brandon Staley said.

The Chargers have lost five games under Stanley when leading by 10 or more, tied for second most in the NFL since 2001. Only Baltimore (six) has more in that span.

"We're not where we want to be right now, but that doesn't mean that we can't get there in a couple of weeks," Herbert said.

Skyy Moore bounced back from a tough season opener by catching three passes for 70 yards, including a second-quarter touchdown, as the Chiefs won in Jacksonville in a rematch of January's playoff clash.

Kansas City still sloppy but able to get past Jacksonville

BY MARK LONG

CHIEFS 17, JAGUARS 9

Mahomes will take result despite a 'bad' outing

JACKSONVILLE, FLA. — Patrick Mahomes and the Kansas City Chiefs insist they're fine despite another lackluster offensive effort.

Mahomes threw two touchdown passes, including one to returning star Travis Kelce, and the Chiefs overcame three early turnovers to beat Jacksonville, 17-9, on Sunday for their third victory against the Jaguars in 10 months.

"You play bad and win, it's a lot better than playing bad and losing," Mahomes said. "So I was glad we were able to find a way to get a win at the end of the day, but a lot of stuff that we have to be better at."

At the top of the list: 12 penalties for 94 yards in stifling heat and humidity that caused players to cramp on the field.

"It's still early in the season, and you guys just saw the second game, bringing all the new pieces together," Kelce said. "But right now, hats off to the defense, the way they're planning to keep us in games. We love them for it. We got to stop shooting ourselves in the foot on offense."

The Chiefs (1-1) won their eighth straight in the series and avoided becoming the first defending Super Bowl champions to start 0-2 since Denver in 1999.

The Jaguars (1-1), who insisted all week they owed the Chiefs because of a loss in the divisional round of the AFC playoffs in January, pretty much no-showed in their home opener.

"We got our shot here at home and laid an egg offensively," Jaguars quarterback Trevor Lawrence said. "It's pretty frustrating. . . . It's definitely really, really frustrating when you leave that much out there."

Coach Doug Pederson's team endured another slow start, failed to capitalize on two of three turnovers and struggled to protect Lawrence, who was 0-for-7 passing in the red zone.

The Jaguars had to settle for a field goal after having first and goal at the 1 to start the fourth quarter, and Lawrence later threw incomplete on a fourth-and-12 play with 4:16 remaining. Kansas City didn't let the Jaguars get the ball back.

"No surprises," Jacksonville tight end Evan Engram said. "Just disappointing. We're better than this. We missed. We missed our shot. We're going to definitely move on from this."

The Jaguars certainly should have a better plan for all-pro defensive tackle Chris Jones in a potential rematch.

Making his season debut after ending his holdout and signing a one-year contract, Jones dominated his one-on-one matchups. He manhandled rookie right tackle Anton Harrison and was equally effective against the rest of Jacksonville's line. He finished with 1.5 sacks on five quarterback pressures.

With extra time to prepare following a loss to Detroit 10 days earlier in the NFL opener, the Chiefs had hoped to look a lot more like their normally dynamic selves on offense. But Richie James muffed a punt, Justin Watson fumbled, and Mahomes threw an interception. Kadarius Toney, who dropped three passes in the opener, fumbled late in the third but was able to scoop up the loose ball and avoid another turnover.

"Too many procedure penalties, turnovers," Chiefs Coach Andy Reid said. "We'll get that taken care of."

Mahomes completed 29 of 41 passes for 305 yards. He found Kelce all alone in the end zone to extend Kansas City's lead to 14-6.

Kelce, who missed the opener because of a hyperextended knee, punted the ball into the end zone to celebrate. He finished with four catches for 26 yards.

The Chiefs converted twice on fourth down and outgained Jacksonville 399 to 271 in total yards.

"Those guys are ticked off in there. They're mad," said Pederson, who fell to 0-4 against his mentor, Reid. "But it's so early in this season that one game's not going to define who we are and it's not going to define our season."

Jackson outshines Burrow, who's 0-2

RAVENS 27, BENGALS 24

BY MITCH STACY

CINCINNATI — Lamar Jackson did more than enough to beat the Cincinnati Bengals, even without injured running back J.K. Dobbins.

The Ravens' explosive quarterback threw two touchdown passes and extended drives with his legs Sunday as Baltimore outlasted slow-starting Cincinnati, 27-24.

The AFC North champion Bengals fell to 0-2 for the second consecutive season, and quarterback Joe Burrow may have aggravated a calf injury that sidelined him for all of training camp.

The Ravens (2-0), their division rivals, certainly looked like the better team for most of the game.

Jackson was 24 for 33 for 237 yards. He ran for 54 more, and Gus Edwards — with more chances because of Dobbins's season-ending torn Achilles' tendon — picked up 62 yards on 10 carries.

"Lamar played winning football. He got in a rhythm early, hit some passes and made some huge plays throwing the ball down the field," Baltimore Coach John Harbaugh said.

Burrow, who limped off the field after throwing off his back foot for a short touchdown late in the game, finished 27 for 41 for 222 yards and two touchdowns after passing for just 86 yards last week in the season-opening loss to the Cleveland Browns.

He said he would have to see how his calf feels over the next two days before knowing whether it would affect his availability.

"It's not what we were planning on, not what you want to do at all, but we'll bounce back," Burrow said. "That's what we do. That's all there is to it."

Burrow hooked up with Tee Higgins for a four-yard touchdown on third and goal to cut the deficit to three with 3:28 left in the game.

But the Bengals couldn't stop Jackson and the Ravens' offense, which moved the chains twice after the ensuing kickoff to run out the clock.

DYLAN BUELL/GETTY IMAGES

Baltimore's Lamar Jackson was in rarefied air Sunday, passing for 237 yards and rushing for 54 more.

"[In] previous years, we been finishing with our defense on the field and we haven't been doing a great job of finishing the last drives," Jackson said. "Today we did."

Jackson completed all five passes he threw on a 70-yard opening drive that ate up nearly eight minutes, and Edwards bulled in from one yard out to finish it.

The Bengals tied it early in the second quarter on an electrifying 81-yard punt return for a touchdown by rookie Charlie Jones. It was Jones's first NFL score and the first punt returned for a touchdown by a Cincinnati player since 2012.

The Bengals didn't shake off their lingering offensive malaise until well into the second quarter. They didn't record a first down until more than 10 minutes into the second, and that came on a defensive pass interference penalty.

But the drive stalled at the Baltimore 9 when cornerback Rock Ya-Sin knocked away a pass into the end zone intended for Ja'Marr Chase. The Bengals had to settle for 27-yard field goal from Evan McPherson.

In the second half, Burrow engineered a drive that went to the Baltimore 17, but he was picked off near the goal line by Geno Stone.

"You can't have a red-zone turnover against that team, and that was on me," Burrow said.

The Ravens' ensuing drive ended with a three-yard touchdown pass from Jackson to Mark Andrews for a 20-10 lead.

The Bengals pulled within 20-17 while putting together their best drive of the season, with Burrow going 8 for 10 and tossing a three-yard touchdown pass to Higgins.

Baltimore pushed the lead back to 10 in the fourth quarter when Jackson connected with Nelson Agholor from 17 yards out.

"So that's the way it goes when you play these guys," Cincinnati Coach Zac Taylor said. "I just told our team, this is one of those games you store away and you learn from so that you win more games down the road because of what we went through here."

49ers 30, Rams 23

Brock Purdy passed for 206 yards and ran for an early touchdown, Deebo Samuel rushed for an 11-yard score with 11:28 left, and San Francisco hung on for its 12th consecutive regular season victory.

Christian McCaffrey rushed for 116 yards and a score for the 49ers, whose only loss to the Rams since December 2018 was in the NFC championship game in January 2022.

Isaiah Oliver and Deommodore Lenoir intercepted passes by Matthew Stafford in the second half, finally allowing the 49ers to pull in front of their longtime rivals.

The 49ers' defense overcame a record-setting effort by Puka Nacua, who caught 15 passes for 147 yards for Los Angeles. The fifth-round pick broke the NFL's single-game record for receptions by a rookie, and he set an overall league mark with 25 catches in his first two career games.

Stafford passed for 307 yards and threw a touchdown pass to Kyren Williams, who also rushed for a touchdown and had 100 combined offensive yards.

Giants 31, Cardinals 28

Daniel Jones threw for 321 yards and two touchdowns, Graham Gano connected on a 34-yard field goal with 19 seconds remaining, and New York rallied from a 21-point third-quarter deficit to stun Arizona.

It was the biggest comeback win for the Giants since a 21-point rally in 1949 — also against the Cardinals. Arizona blew its biggest lead since 2011.

The Giants lost 40-0 in Week 1 against the Cowboys and didn't look much better against the Cardinals during the first half, falling into a 20-0 hole at halftime. They trailed 28-7 in the third quarter but cut the margin to 28-14 on Saquon Barkley's one-yard touchdown run.

New York kept the pressure on in the fourth, pulling within 28-21 with 8:51 left on a nine-yard touchdown pass from Jones to Barkley. They tied the game on Jones's perfectly placed 11-yard touchdown pass to a diving Isaiah Hodgins.

The Giants forced a three-and-out, then drove 56 yards in eight plays to set up Gano's kick.

Jones was 26 of 37 passing and also ran for 59 yards and a score.

Falcons 25, Packers 24

Younghoe Koo booted a 25-yard field goal with 57 seconds remaining and rookie Bijan Robinson turned in another dynamic performance, rallying Atlanta to a victory.

Robinson rushed for 124 yards on 19 carries and hauled in four catches for another 48 yards, showing why the Falcons selected him with the No. 8 pick in the draft even though running backs don't typically go that high anymore.

The Packers squandered a 24-12 lead and three more touchdown passes from Jordan Love, who now has a half-dozen scoring throws in his first two games as Aaron Rodgers's replacement.

Atlanta's young quarterback, Desmond Ridder, bootlegged for a six-yard touchdown on fourth and four with just under 12 minutes remaining.

Then it was Ridder and Robinson teaming up for two more drives that set up field goals by Koo, including a 39-yarder with 8:13 remaining.

Despite an injury-depleted offense around him, Love completed 14 of 25 passes for 151 yards and hooked up with a pair of rookies on his three scores.

Bills 38, Raiders 10

Josh Allen rebounded from a four-turnover season-opening dud by throwing three touchdown passes and leading Buffalo to a rout of Las Vegas.

Linebackers Matt Milano and Terrel Bernard each intercepted Jimmy Garoppolo passes, and the Bills eased the lingering frustrations following a 22-16 overtime loss at the New York Jets on Monday and a week full of off-field distractions.

Coach Sean McDermott had to address his leadership group after team owner Terry Pegula was accused of making racially insensitive comments in a lawsuit filed by a reporter. Pegula denied the allegations.

And then Wednesday, a Bills media reporter was overheard on an open microphone questioning wide receiver Stefon Diggs's character. Diggs went to social media a day later and called the comments "hurtful" and "insulting."

It was an especially uplifting performance from Allen, who enjoyed his 21st three-or-more touchdown outing after spending much of last week facing questions about his sloppy performance.

Seahawks 37, Lions 31 (OT)

Geno Smith threw a second touchdown pass to Tyler Lockett on the opening drive of overtime, lifting Seattle.

The Seahawks earned the victory after the Lions rallied from a 10-point deficit late in the fourth quarter, extending the game with Riley Patterson's 38-yard field goal as regulation expired.

Smith threw a go-ahead, three-yard touchdown pass to Lockett early in the fourth and Tre Brown returned a Jared Goff interception for a score on the ensuing drive to give Seattle a 31-21 lead.

Goff showed his resilience after throwing his first interception in 383 attempts — 30 shy of the NFL record — by throwing a four-yard touchdown pass to Josh Reynolds.

The Seahawks bounced back from a lopsided opening-week loss at home against the Los Angeles Rams.

Buccaneers 27, Bears 17

Baker Mayfield passed for 317 yards and a touchdown, adding to his strong debut with Tampa Bay.

With Mayfield playing turnover-free ball for the second straight week and Mike Evans catching six passes for 171 yards and a touchdown, the Buccaneers improved to 2-0 while handing Chicago a franchise-record 12th consecutive loss.

Mayfield completed 26 of 34 passes, looking quite comfortable in another new home. The No. 1 overall pick in the 2018 NFL draft is playing with his fourth team in just over two years.

He set up Rachaad White's one-yard touchdown run with a 70-yard completion to Evans in the first quarter. He also finished an 89-yard drive with a 32-yard scoring pass to Tampa Bay's all-time leading receiver early in the second half.

Tampa Bay's defense did its job, too, after yielding a 75-yard touchdown drive on Chicago's first possession. The Buccaneers sacked Justin Fields six times and picked him off twice.

DOLPHINS 24, PATRIOTS 17

BY KYLE HIGHTOWER

FOXBOROUGH, MASS. — Raheem Mostert had a pair of touchdown runs, including a 43-yard romp in the fourth quarter, and Tua Tagovailoa added a two-yard scoring pass to Tyreek Hill to help the Miami Dolphins hold off the New England Patriots, 24-17, on Sunday night.

Mostert carried 18 times for 121 yards, and Tagovailoa completed 21 of 30 passes for 249 yards and an interception. After opening with two road wins, the Dolphins will try for their second straight 3-0 start under Coach Mike McDaniel when they host Denver next weekend.

New England dropped to 0-2 for the first time since 2001, which was Bill Belichick's second season as its coach.

Trailing 24-17, the Patriots appeared to keep their hopes alive by converting a miraculous fourth and four on the Miami 33. Mac Jones completed a pass to Mike Gesicki short of the first down marker, but the veteran tight end spun and flipped the ball to left guard Cole Strange, who lunged forward.

It was originally called a first down, but a review showed Strange was short of the needed yardage, turning the ball over on downs. Miami then ran the clock out.

Jones finished 31 of 42 for 231 yards and a touchdown with an interception.

The Patriots played shorthanded in the secondary after cornerback Jonathan Jones was ruled out before kickoff with an ankle injury. They took another hit in the second quarter when Marcus Jones left with a shoulder issue.

The Dolphins took advantage as Tagovailoa spread the ball around to eight receivers, including nine completions to Hill and Jaylen Waddle.

Defensively, Miami recovered a first-quarter fumble by rookie Demario Douglas, leading to Mostert's first score. Then, leading 17-3 in the third quarter, Dolphins cornerback Xavien Howard grabbed an underthrown pass from Mac Jones that was intended for DeVante Parker inside the 5.

Miami punted the ball back, and New England found some traction, using an 18-yard run by Jones and a holding penalty on Howard to help set up a six-yard scoring pass from Jones to Hunter Henry.

New England got the ball right back when Tagovailoa had a deep pass intended for Hill intercepted by Christian Gonzalez. But backed up, the Patriots went three and out.

Then, on the first play after the changeover, Mostert took a handoff, found a seam in the middle of the Patriots' defense and sprinted for his 43-yard touchdown.

New England marched right down the field and closed to 24-17 on Rhamondre Stevenson's two-yard touchdown run, capping a nine-play, 75-yard drive.

Miami had the ball on its own 30 when Tagovailoa missed on a pass to Waddle. But Marte Mapu was called for unnecessary roughness, giving the Dolphins a first down near midfield.

The Dolphins had a chance to extend their lead with a 55-yard field goal attempt by Jason Sanders, but it missed wide left.

The Dolphins' defense, shown after an interception by cornerback Xavien Howard (not pictured), allowed just 288 total yards and forced a pair of turnovers at New England.

Colts 31, Texans 20

Anthony Richardson rushed for two touchdowns before leaving with a concussion, and Gardner Minshew II threw for 171 yards and a score for Indianapolis.

It was the first win for Coach Shane Steichen, who was hired in February after spending the past two seasons as Philadelphia's offensive coordinator.

The Colts led by 18 at halftime and managed only a field goal in the second half. But their dominant start was enough to snap an eight-game skid dating back to last season. It was their first win since Nov. 13 at Las Vegas.

Richardson gave the Colts an early lead when he dashed 18 yards untouched on their first drive.

C.J. Stroud fumbled when he was sacked by Samson Ebukam, and it was recovered by Indianapolis at the 15. Richardson made it 14-0 when he ran 15 yards for the score on the next play.

The back of the rookie quarterback's head hit the turf when he was pushed down at the end of the score.

NOTES

Nacua proves no fluke, breaking rookie record

ASSOCIATED PRESS

With Cooper Kupp sidelined by a hamstring injury, Puka Nacua is picking up the slack for the Los Angeles Rams.

So far, so record-breaking good.

Nacua, a fifth-round pick out of BYU, set the NFL single-game record for most receptions by a rookie with 15 catches for 147 yards in Sunday's 30-23 loss to the San Francisco 49ers.

"I don't know if I can wrap my head all the way around it," Nacua said. "I'm executing in the moments where I'm asked and try to stay as present as I can."

Nacua broke the record with a 17-yard reception late in the fourth quarter that put the Rams in the red zone and set up a 38-yard field goal by Brett Maher on the game's final play.

The reception surpassed the former mark of 14 held by Washington's Roy Helu, the New York Giants' Saquon Barkley and Pittsburgh's Najee Harris.

Nacua is also the first player in NFL history with double-digit receptions and 100 yards receiving in each of his first two career games. He had 10 receptions for 119 yards in last weekend's opener at Seattle.

He is the fifth player overall to accomplish the feat in the first two games of a season. Isaac Bruce (1998) and Kupp (2022) also did it with the Rams, along with Atlanta's Andre Rison in 1994 and Dallas's Miles Austin in 2010.

• RAIDERS: A week after Josh Jacobs complained he had some rust to shake off, the NFL's defending rushing champion found himself running in reverse.

The Las Vegas running back finished with a career-worst minus-two yards rushing Sunday in a 38-10 loss to the Buffalo Bills. In doing so, he became the first NFL rushing leader from the previous season to finish with negative yardage in a game since the 1970 merger, according to Elias Sports Bureau.

"I feel like I just got to do more, honestly," said Jacobs, who led the league last year with 1,653 yards rushing and 2,053 yards from scrimmage.

Jacobs never found his footing after getting thrown for a loss by Bills lineman Ed Oliver on the first play from scrimmage. He had minus-six yards on seven carries in the first half. Once the Bills built their lead to 28-10 on their opening drive of the second half, the Raiders' offense was forced to become one-dimensional.

"We need to address where we went wrong and improve from there," Jacobs said. "I don't think we just need a next game and flush it. I don't think that would create a winning culture."

After missing the entire offseason because of a contract dispute, Jacobs finally joined the Raiders by signing a one-year contract worth up to $12 million with bonuses Aug. 26.

He blamed rust for finishing with 48 yards rushing on 19 carries in a season-opening 17-16 win at Denver. His 2.5-yard rushing average was the third lowest of his career before Sunday. Jacobs's 46 yards for the season mark the worst two-game rushing total of his five-year career.

• TEXANS: Quarterback C.J. Stroud was talking to some old friends this week about the challenges he has faced early in his NFL career.

He said one of them told him, "No one said it was going to be easy." It certainly wasn't Sunday.

Stroud threw for 384 yards and two touchdowns, but the No. 2 overall pick in the NFL draft was hurried and harassed all day while playing behind a makeshift line during a 31-20 loss to the Indianapolis Colts.

The 21-year-old was sacked six times and hit nine other times. The Texans (0-2) lost four starters on the line during camp and were also without star left tackle Laremy Tunsil on Sunday because of a knee injury.

Sunday's six-sack day comes after Stroud was sacked five times in a loss to Baltimore in the opener, and he struggled with a shoulder injury this week.

"He's unfazed. He's always the same. Good play. Bad play. Doesn't matter," veteran tackle Charles Leno Jr. said of Sam Howell, who went 27 for 39 for 299 yards and two touchdowns Sunday for Washington.

Check. Check.

Check?

"He's learning," Coach Ron Rivera said. "I think he's going to get better."

That's the course. Two weeks are too few to make any franchise-changing pronouncements because we know how much quarterback instability is baked into Washington's cake. So deep breaths are in order. Howell hasn't yet faced or beaten a team with Super Bowl aspirations. Those challenges await. The full evaluation is to come.

But in Sunday's 27-for-39, 299-yard, two-touchdown performance that was defined by its poise, he followed iffy plays with solid ones, made smart choices with all manner of limbs swarming in his face and teeth nipping at his heels, and looked the part of NFL starting quarterback. For a fifth-round pick in the 2022 draft, can you ask much more? Not just in the stat line. But in the way he carries himself.

"Man, I've said it before, and I've been saying it since camp," left tackle Charles Leno Jr. said. "He's unfazed. He's always the same. Good play. Bad play. Doesn't matter."

That's the proper attitude for any professional football player — for any athlete, really. But for a kid who turned just 23 on Saturday and is being entrusted to play a $6 billion franchise's most important position, it's massive. Leno, a 10-year veteran, said he approached Howell on the sideline to tell him as much.

"That's important as a quarterback," Leno said he told Howell. "The team responds to that. That's what a quarterback is supposed to do."

The other thing he's supposed to do: be able to sling the dang football, to put it in tight spaces, to have the combination of arm strength, anticipation, preparation and decision-making that separates mediocre quarterbacks from good — let's not get to great yet — ones.

So we direct you to first and 10 from the Denver 30, with the Commanders having clawed back within 21-14 early in the third quarter.

"I've been wanting a play down the field for a while," star wide receiver Terry McLaurin said, chuckling.

So many things about what happened on the ensuing play down the field were impressive, both on the face of it in real time and in hearing about what led to it. What was apparent in person: McLaurin had Broncos cornerback Damarri Mathis on his back and safety Delarrin Turner-Yell in front of him.

"I trusted that me and Sam were going to connect on that play," McLaurin said.

In his fifth year in Washington, McLaurin knows nothing but a quarterback carousel. So trusting a kid making his third NFL start? "Him and I have had that connection in practice," McLaurin said, and he talked about Howell knowing where he would be and him knowing where Howell would throw it. Maybe that's chemistry that has developed with uncommon speed. But it's also rehearsed.

"That was a play coming into the game we knew we wanted to get called," Howell said, "just to give Terry an opportunity."

When the opportunity was there, "Sam threw an unbelievable ball." It was far enough ahead of McLaurin that the trailing Mathis had no chance. It was lofted just high enough that Turner-Yell, underneath, couldn't reach it either.

"It shows you he can be pinpoint accurate," Rivera said.

It shows you he can make throws so many recent Washington quarterbacks couldn't make.

So the last time Washington scored 35 points in a game? Thanksgiving 2020 in Dallas, when it hung 41 on the Cowboys. But that was punctuated by a Montez Sweat pick-six. The last time this franchise put up 35 on offense? The penultimate game of the 2019 season, when Dwayne Haskins and Case Keenum helped reach that total in New York, a game the Giants won in overtime.

"The thing I'm proud of is we had each other's back on both sides of the ball," said Howell, who has shown poise despite just turning 23.

That's a long way of saying what happened Sunday against the Broncos doesn't happen much for this franchise. That it happened with Howell at the helm matters. He talks a good quarterback game, too.

"The thing I'm proud of," he said, "is we had each other's back on both sides of the ball."

That happens to be true. To be clear, for any of this to work, the defense has to be this team's unquestioned strength. For the Broncos' first three possessions, Washington provided all the resistance of a preschool class at nap time: a 61-yard touchdown drive in which Denver faced just one third down, a 60-yard bomb from Russell Wilson to rookie Marvin Mims Jr., then 90 yards in nine plays that included a 53-yard strike to Mims.

That's the path to a 21-3 Denver lead. It's also a path that is unacceptable if the Commanders actually want to be relevant this season. The defense seemed to recognize that and from that point forward was perhaps the best version of itself — at least until Wilson's last-play Hail Mary that brought the Broncos within two.

Daron Payne is absolutely too much for offensive linemen to handle. Linebacker Jamin Davis provided a route to a comeback with a forced fumble. Sweat disrupted his way to a 1.5 sacks.

And — well, what have we here? — Chase Young made his season debut after enduring a stinger in the preseason opener. He sparkled. He sacked Wilson from behind. He got in Wilson's face. He was around the ball. He looked like a force.

"Great to see Chase out there," Howell said.

That's a player who understands just by the nature of his job title — starting NFL quarterback — that the team is, in some ways, his already. Through two weeks, Sam Howell is completing 65.7 percent of his passes. He has three touchdowns and one interception. He has lost two fumbles. He has been sacked 10 times.

Sometimes he holds on to the ball too long. Sometimes his line lets him down. And sometimes he makes just the right throw at just the right time. The 2023 Commanders are 2-0, and every game is an opportunity to learn more about whether the man playing quarterback for them at the moment could be their quarterback for the foreseeable future. What a notion. Can't wait till next week.

Commanders improve to 2-0 after rousing comeback win

COMMANDERS FROM D1

Big plays? Washington allowed more than enough.

Even special teams had disastrous moments, with a botched snap, missed field goal attempts and a 45-yard punt return by Denver.

But after falling into a hole, the Commanders quickly climbed out and secured a 35-33 win thanks to defensive takeaways, the poise of their young quarterback and a career performance from running back Brian Robinson Jr.

The victory, which was nearly erased by a Hail Mary touchdown by Wilson in the final seconds, was the Commanders' second consecutive second-half comeback win and put them at 2-0 for the first time since 2011. It was also Coach Ron Rivera's 100th regular season victory as a coach and Howell's first road win.

Washington's 23-year-old quarterback had miscues but also showed resilience, offering hope that maybe, just maybe, he can be the Commanders' quarterback of the future.

"He's very unflappable, and he really handled the game very well," Rivera said. "I think his teammates feed off of it. It was exciting to see him do the things he did today because those are things we're going to build off of."

But the remarkable second-half surge was keyed in large part by Washington's running game, a facet of Eric Bieniemy's offense that was in question after Week 1 and for much of the first half Sunday. Against the Broncos, Washington totaled 388 net yards of offense, with 190 in the first half and 198 in the second. It more than tripled its production on the ground from Week 1 and nearly doubled its average yardage per play in the second half (7.6 yards per play vs. 4.8).

Robinson ran the ball 18 times Sunday for 87 yards and two touchdowns, the first of which put the Commanders ahead 28-24. Robinson also had 42 receiving yards on two catches, showing his versatility and the growth of Washington's screen game under Bieniemy.

"Once he got it rolling, that's what the young man's capable of," Rivera said. "This is indicative of what he can be. This was balance as far as our offense was concerned. . . . We saw that today — the ability to run the ball, the ability to throw the ball, use the screen game, run the ball inside, run the ball outside. We did some things that were really good for us, and we can grow from these things."

Running back Brian Robinson Jr. powers forward on a third-quarter run. "He makes the defense feel it every single time he touches the ball," Howell said of the 228-pounder.

Things began to turn around in the second quarter, when linebacker Jamin Davis delivered with a strip sack of Wilson. Fellow linebacker Cody Barton recovered the ball, giving the offense a chance to start to erase the deficit.

Tight end Logan Thomas caught a four-yard touchdown pass from Howell and held on to the ball as safety Kareem Jackson clobbered him with a helmet-to-helmet hit. Thomas left the game with a concussion, and Jackson was disqualified. But in the aftermath, Robinson gave Washington one of its earliest momentum swings with a two-point conversion, his body crossing the goal line by mere inches for the score.

In the third quarter, after defensive tackle Daron Payne almost single-handedly forced a Denver three-and-out with a sack, a tackle for a loss and a batted pass, Robinson had an 11-yard run to set up Howell's 30-yard touchdown pass to Terry McLaurin in the end zone. Washington had practiced the play throughout the week.

"I've been wanting a play down the field for a while," McLaurin said. "I just wanted to stay patient. I knew we were going to get the look, and to be honest, it was actually a different look than we anticipated in practice, but I trusted that me and Sam were going to connect on that play."

McLaurin ran a post route from the right side, and Howell threw a dart to his left shoulder, just out of the reach of the two defenders crowding him.

"It's one of those plays that changes the momentum," McLaurin said of the touchdown.

Robinson delivered many more in the second half Sunday, including a 27-yard catch that helped set up his first touchdown in the fourth quarter and a 21-yard catch to help set up his second touchdown six minutes later.

"He runs hard; he runs physical," Howell said. "He makes the defense feel it every single time he touches the ball. . . . He's a killer when he gets the ball. It's so much fun to play with a guy like that."

Rivera said Robinson's breakout performance showed his true potential as a playmaker for Washington and especially in Bieniemy's offense. Robinson said he isn't close to reaching his full potential.

"I know I got a lot more in the tank that I can show," he said. "I'm taking those strides week in and week out. Eventually, it'll be all out on display."

And Robinson wasn't the only back to find success Sunday. Antonio Gibson, who has lobbied for years to be used more in the passing game, got his wish, turning a short screen pass into a 36-yard gain in the fourth quarter.

"The defensive ends were playing a lot into the tackles, so all game we were like, 'Be prepared for the screen, be prepared for the screen,' and it finally got called," Gibson said. "I was patient on it . . . and I tried to hit the burners."

As the offense made plays, so too did the defense. Chase Young, returning from a stinger he suffered in the preseason, had his first full sack in nearly two years and finished with 1.5. Sweat added 1.5 of his own, giving him three on the season.

Rookie corner Emmanuel Forbes, who was beaten early on a 54-yard catch by Broncos wide receiver Marvin Mims Jr., came back to record his first career interception in the third quarter.

"That's how the game goes," Leno said. "At times, the offense is going to need to help the defense, defense is going to need to help the offense, but at the end of the day, it was a team effort. We all played a part in making it that way, and we all played a part in turning it around."

Not since 2015 has Washington come back from as many as 18 points to win. Sunday's game was also Washington's largest road comeback since it rallied from a 21-point deficit at the Detroit Lions in 1990.

"I'm telling you, it feels different," Leno added. "I just feel like this team, we're resilient, we just find ways to win. It doesn't matter what the score is, doesn't matter what the situation is, it's all about getting the W."

NFL WEEK 2

Commanders defensive end Chase Young, who sat out last week's victory, sacks Broncos quarterback Russell Wilson. Young finished with 1.5 of Washington's seven sacks.

TAKEAWAYS

Washington's start is its best in 12 years

After overcoming an 18-point deficit in Sam Howell's first career road start, the Washington Commanders are 2-0 to start the season for the first time since 2011. The win wasn't easy, and the game wasn't over until Benjamin St-Juste broke up Russell Wilson's two-point conversion attempt in the end zone after Wilson's 50-yard Hail Mary landed in the arms of Broncos wide receiver Brandon Johnson as time expired.

Washington had lost four straight games after starting 1-0 and hadn't won in Denver since 2001, when Kent Graham's fourth-quarter touchdown pass to Zeron Flemister accounted for the winning score. Sunday's improbable and heart-stopping triumph was Washington's first comeback from at least 18 points down since Kirk Cousins shouted, "You like that?!" after leading it back from a 24-point deficit against Tampa Bay in 2015.

The road victory was the 100th regular season win of Coach Ron Rivera's coaching career and his first in five games, including the postseason, against the Broncos. It was an important one, too; the Commanders' schedule gets considerably tougher over the next two weeks, with a home game against the Buffalo Bills followed by a trip to Philadelphia to face the Eagles.

Commanders running back Brian Robinson Jr. races into the end zone for one of his two fourth-quarter scores. He finished with 87 yards.

Defensive turnaround

For the second straight week, the Commanders' fortunes changed after a sack-fumble by their defense. On Sunday, it came with Washington trailing 21-3 and Denver driving for another potential score early in the second quarter. After Chase Young flushed Wilson out of the pocket, Jamin Davis jarred the ball loose, and Cody Barton recovered it at the Denver 49-yard line. Nine plays later, tight end Logan Thomas made a fourth-down touchdown catch despite taking a huge and illegal hit from safety Kareem Jackson.

Washington forced a three-and-out on Denver's next possession, giving the ball back to Howell, who led another impressive drive that produced a field goal before halftime.

The Commanders' defense picked up where it left off in the second half, forcing a three-and-out on Denver's opening possession of the third quarter. Young, who missed Week 1 with a stinger he suffered during the preseason, finished with 1.5 of Washington's seven sacks. Young's first full sack since Oct. 10, 2021, came in the third quarter and forced a Broncos field goal in the red zone.

Robinson breaks out

Brian Robinson Jr., Washington's second-year running back, had five carries for 13 yards in the first half, and he seemed to get stronger as the game wore on despite the altitude. He had an 11-yard run to set up Howell's perfectly placed 30-yard touchdown pass to Terry McLaurin in the third quarter, and his 27-yard burst sparked a 75-yard march that he capped with a short touchdown run to give Washington its first lead. A few minutes later, Robinson's 15-yard touchdown run and the ensuing extra point gave the Commanders an 11-point lead.

Robinson, who finished with 18 carries for 87 yards, was a weapon in the passing game, too, taking a pair of screen passes for a combined 42 yards. Washington took advantage of Broncos coordinator Vance Joseph's aggressive defense on multiple occasions, with Antonio Gibson adding three catches for 44 yards. Eric Bieniemy's play-calling helped produce Washington's most points since it scored 41 in a Thanksgiving Day rout of the Cowboys in 2020.

Wilson vs. Howell

The Broncos shredded Washington's defense with touchdowns on their first three drives. Before his lost fumble, Wilson was 5 for 6 for 147 yards and two touchdowns, including a 60-yard bomb to rookie Marvin Mims Jr., who added a 54-yard catch on Denver's second possession and a 45-yard punt return later in the half. Though Wilson's Hail Mary-aided final numbers — 18 for 32 for 308 yards and three touchdowns — look solid, Howell outplayed the veteran in the second half.

On one third-quarter possession, Commanders rookie cornerback Emmanuel Forbes picked off Wilson for his first career interception two plays after Darrick Forrest dropped a potential interception. Howell finished 27 for 39 for 299 yards and two touchdowns. He also had a key third-down scramble drive. Howell was sacked once on each of Washington's first three possessions but only one other time in the game.

Riding Soto

Former Nationals star Juan Soto crushed a pair of homers — a two-run shot in the seventh inning and a grand slam in the eighth — to help the Padres sweep the Athletics and keep their slim playoff hopes alive.

Padres 10, Athletics 1

Juan Soto homered twice, including his first career grand slam, and San Diego beat Oakland for its first four-game winning streak of the season.

The Padres had been the only team in baseball to not have a winning streak over three games. Meanwhile, the Athletics suffered their 103rd loss, their most since 1979.

Pirates 3, Yankees 2

Jason Delay hit a tie-breaking double in the seventh inning that benefited from a fortunate bounce off third base, and Pittsburgh edged New York to avoid a three-game sweep.

David Bednar, unavailable Friday when the Pirates lost a late lead in a 7-5 loss, picked up his 36th save.

ORIOLES 5, RAYS 4 (11)

BY NATHAN RUIZ

BALTIMORE — The Baltimore Orioles have spent much of Brandon Hyde's tenure being looked down upon. Now, they've spent almost six months craning necks upward.

On Sunday, the Orioles clinched their first playoff berth since 2016, the culmination of a rebuilding process that fully launched in the winter of 2018 when Mike Elias was brought in as executive vice president and general manager and Hyde was hired as manager.

They inherited the worst team in the majors, an organization with bad contracts and bad infrastructure. In each of Hyde's first three years, Baltimore finished with one of baseball's five worst records, twice losing at least 108 games as his lineups and pitching staffs were littered with overmatched players. Two seasons ago, they lost 110 games, twice losing at least 14 games in a row.

But with the Texas Rangers' loss Sunday, the Orioles and the Tampa Bay Rays both locked up playoff spots amid their series finale at Camden Yards, with Baltimore adding an exclamation to the day with a 5-4, walk-off victory in 11 innings on Cedric Mullins's sacrifice fly. The win gave the Orioles (93-56) a two-game lead over the Rays in the American League East.

Dean Kremer, the only player left from the July 2018 Manny Machado trade that sparked the Orioles' rebuild, pitched five innings of one-run ball, and Adley Rutschman, the club's first overall draft pick in 2019, provided a home run in the eighth and a game-tying single in the 10th.

ORIOLES FROM D1

Hyde has managed the Orioles since 2019, but he is new to this, too. He used to be the guy trying to keep morale high when expectations were painfully low. Now he is managing meaningful baseball, charged with steering one of the sport's most talented young rosters into title contention.

Over the years, he developed a habit of watching replays of each game after the fact. But with a late-night finish Saturday and an early start Sunday, he didn't have time to review all of Saturday's 8-0 Orioles win. So he watched a small part, though not the eight-run outburst that ended one of the more frustrating offensive droughts of their year. Instead, Hyde watched the moment 23-year-old starter Grayson Rodriguez began heading into unfamiliar late-inning territory under unprecedented late-season pressure.

"He was getting to a point where he hadn't been before. Was he going to be able to keep his fastball? Was he going to be able to keep his command? Was he going to be able to keep his composure?" Hyde said.

"I re-watched that."

Hyde has been watching the Orioles do that all season, ever since the end of their breakout 2022 campaign as people around the sport wondered whether Baltimore's emergence was more cute than legitimate. No one questioned whether the Orioles' organization had enough young talent to contend. The question entering this year is the same one that faces the team even now, after months of leading one of the deepest divisions in the sport. Could all that young talent immediately coalesce into a contender?

"I thought we were underappreciated. I think everybody thought we were going to have a setback," Hyde said. "I wanted our players to be offended by that a little bit."

Offended or not, the Orioles have proved they can get to the postseason. They have not been tested often, not by injuries, not by doubt. But every time they have been tested by inexperience, by the mere fact that they are doing some part of a competitive regular season for the first time, they have passed.

Most recently, they entered Saturday's game on a two-game skid that felt like six, seemingly on the verge of confirming that they were not quite ready to handle the rigors of the AL East from pole to pole. They responded with their largest margin of victory all season and a stunning comeback win against an annual contender.

Similarly, their rotation is built on pitchers who had never been year-long staples. Rodriguez, Kyle Bradish and Sunday's starter, Dean Kremer, blew by their innings limits as Baltimore's schedule reached its tensest point. But Orioles starters, who own a 4.35 ERA for the season, entered Sunday with a 3.98 ERA for the past 30 days.

And despite their lineup being led by two young players who have known the Orioles only as winners in the aggregate (Adley Rutschman and Gunnar Henderson), the Orioles have not been quick to succumb to doubts spurred by short bursts of losing, either.

In fact, since Rutschman came up in May 2022, the Orioles have lost plenty of series, but they have never been swept. He and Henderson, two of the players projected to be cornerstones, have been just that, and both played crucial roles this weekend.

Rutschman delivered a two-out homer in the eighth inning Sunday that set the stage for the Orioles' ninth-inning comeback, and it was his hit that tied the game for them in the 10th. The 22-year-old Henderson led off Saturday's game with a base hit up the middle that seemed to swat away any doubt that might have crept into the Orioles' offense after a few slow nights, then followed it with a second-inning homer that helped ignite the rout.

But Henderson, Rutschman and Rodriguez aren't the only ones who have never popped bottles like this before. It is the first time Anthony Santander, Austin Hays, Cedric Mullins and other longer-tenured Orioles had the chance to celebrate, too. Hays singled with two outs in the ninth to set up Adam Frazier's game-tying double. Mullins, who has been at the heart of so many rallies and run-saving plays all year, provided the game-winning sacrifice fly. That trio hugged as the champagne flowed. Eventually Elias grabbed goggles and chugged beer from the Orioles' trademark homer hose. Even owner John Angelos grabbed a bottle, but he stood well out of the way, as if not quite sure where he was supposed to be at a time such as this.

They will all get used to this celebration thing in time, if everything goes to plan. To be sure, the hardest tests are yet to come. But the 2023 Orioles haven't failed one yet.

Nats edge Brewers to break five-game losing streak toward third and applied the tag, and the Nationals celebrated a 2-1 win.

"That's kind of been my role the entire year," Chavis said. "That's something I take pride in, staying available. It's something that kind of goes unnoticed for sure. But I'm trying to keep my body loose and my head and do whatever I can so that when my name is called for pinch-running, for defense, whatever the situation is, I'm just as ready as I can possibly be."

Chavis, the former Boston Red Sox first-round pick turned utility player, got a hug from Robert Garcia, who earned the win in relief. The Nationals salvaged a 2-5 road trip — and ended a five-game skid — with Sunday's win, one that seemed unlikely given how many opportunities they squandered an inning earlier.

"Great win," Manager Dave Martinez said. "The guys battled. We battled yesterday as well. We've been in a lot of these games, and to finish the series like this against a really good team feels gratifying. Let's go home feeling good about ourselves and come back tomorrow and do it again."

Neither offense did much in the first six innings. Luis García hit a solo home run in the second to give the Nationals a 1-0 lead. He had two of the Nationals' four hits Sunday.

Patrick Corbin, meanwhile, held the Brewers at bay. He allowed only six base runners over six innings, and two of them were quickly wiped away by double plays. But the Brewers tied the game in the sixth when Mark Canha singled, stole second, advanced to third on a sacrifice bunt and scored on Carlos Santana's sacrifice fly.

The Nationals had plenty of chances late. In the eighth, CJ Abrams grounded into an inning-ending double play with runners on the corners. García grounded out to first with two runners on in the ninth. And even with García on second to start the 10th, the Nationals couldn't get him home after Abrams flied out to left field with two outs.

Fortunately, the Nationals' bullpen held up. Hunter Harvey pitched two scoreless innings. Kyle Finnegan, who took the loss Saturday, stranded a pair of runners in the ninth. And in the 10th, after Garcia loaded the bases with one out, the Nationals turned to a five-man infield, and he escaped with a pair of groundballs.

"I did a lot of watching, and I noticed that this team doesn't expand very much," Garcia said about the Brewers. "They're very disciplined in the zone, and so I knew, back against the wall there with bases loaded, they may not chase, so you may only have one shot. So you got to make good pitches in the zone and trust your stuff. I felt like I did that very well today."

Joey Meneses hit a flyball to shallow center with one out in the 11th. Few would have questioned had third base coach Gary DiSarcina held the runner at third. But that runner was Abrams, the quickest player on the team, and he scored to give the Nationals the lead without a hit.

"[Abrams] was going all the way," Martinez said. "We were taking our chances there, and it worked out."

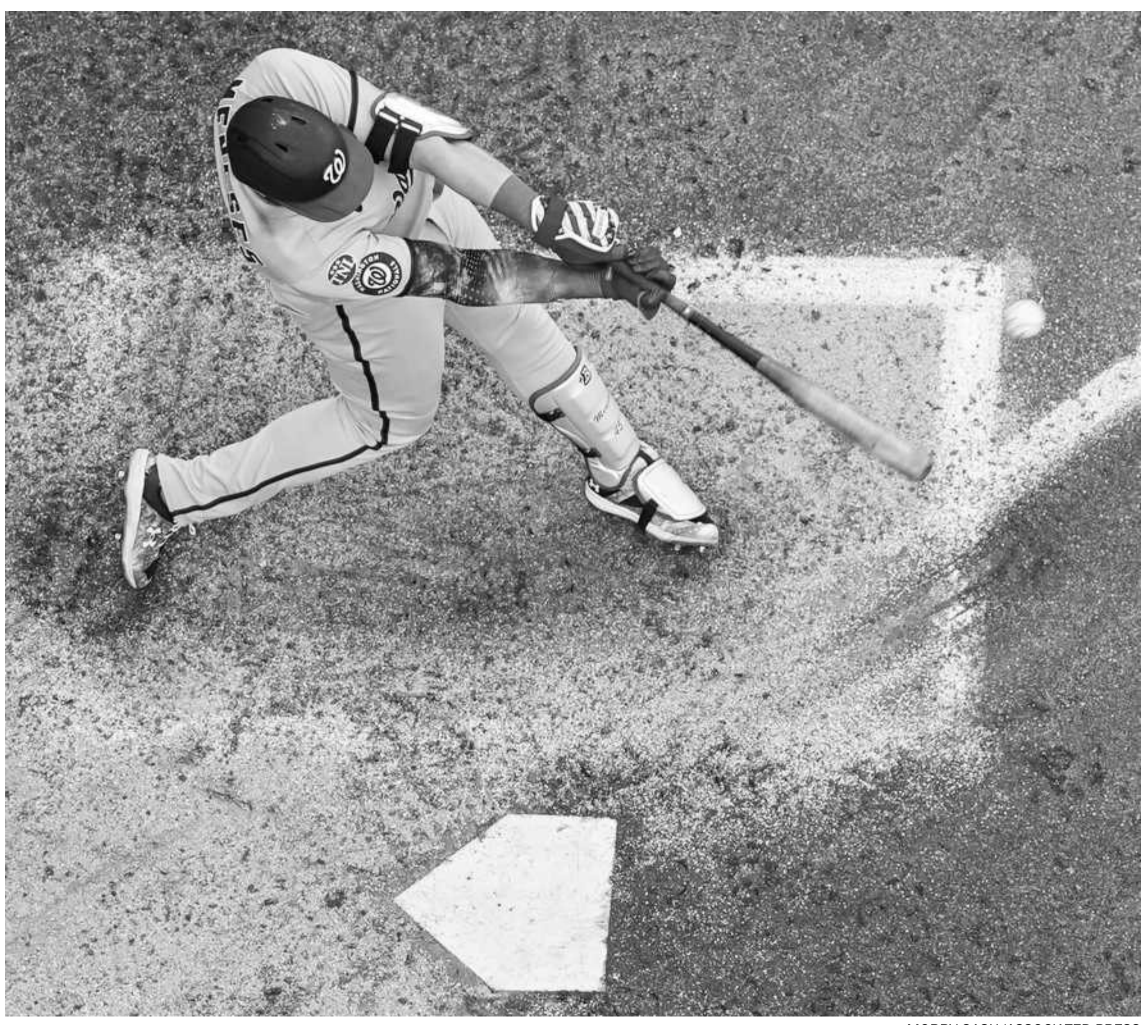

Chavis entered to pinch-run for Dominic Smith in the ninth inning, an overlooked moment in a frantic late-game sequence. Martinez was sacrificing defense and hitting for speed. And yet it was Chavis's glove that saved the day.

"I tried to go through every possibility of the ball coming to me so that I'd know what to do no matter what," Chavis said. "It's a pretty big play."

That it was. If the ball went to his right, Chavis said, he was going straight home. If the ball went to his left, Chavis said, he would step on first base and then go home. The play unfolded like he imagined, and Chavis, who has had few big moments, made the most of this one.

"Honestly, when I was thinking about it, I thought it might be the most fun one," Chavis said. "I was kind of glad that it worked out way. . . . I think that's one of those cases where the preparation really pays off."

Note: The Nationals recalled Cory Abbott from Class AAA Rochester before Sunday's game and optioned Amos Willingham in a corresponding move. Willingham threw 43 pitches in one-plus inning Saturday, so the Nationals needed another option out of the bullpen. The Nationals are in the 11th game of 18 straight before a day off. They now have some length in their bullpen with Abbott and Thaddeus Ward, who was reinstated from his rehab assignment Thursday. Abbott has a 7.48 ERA in 16 appearances this season with Washington.

Birdies boost Theegala to first PGA Tour win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sahith Theegala made more than enough birdies to cover for his mistakes while playing with the lead Sunday, shooting a 4-under-par 68 for a two-shot victory at the Fortinet Championship in Napa, Calif., his first win in 74 starts on the PGA Tour.

The 25-year-old Theegala, who began the day with a two-shot lead, pulled away by playing his first five holes in 3 under while being followed by a large, jubilant group of friends and relatives, including his parents.

"No matter the good golf or the bad golf, they just have my back. It's a team win," Theegala said, his mom and dad by his side on the 18th green. "It's not just a win for me, it's a win for the whole family."

Theegala finished with seven birdies and three bogeys, including one after he hit a tee shot that landed in a fairway bunker on a different hole. With a three-shot lead, he hit his drive and his layup into the rough on the par-5 18th hole and tapped in for a 6. He finished at 21-under 267.

S.H. Kim (68) finished second, and Cam Davis (70) was another shot behind.

Justin Thomas had his worst round of the week in his final tuneup for the Ryder Cup in Rome, closing with an even-par 72 to finish six shots back. Max Homa, the two-time defending champion and Thomas's U.S. teammate, closed with a 69 to tie for seventh.

A Californian and the son of Indian immigrants who played in college at Pepperdine, Theegala made the Tour Championship as a rookie last year, then fell one spot short of a return to East Lake last month. Along the way, he had close calls at Phoenix, Hartford and Sea Island, endearing himself to fans.

Theegala overcame his mistakes this time with steady iron play and superb putting. His three bogeys were one more than he had in the first three rounds combined. Each time, he steadied himself.

• DP WORLD TOUR: Ryan Fox overcame a three-shot deficit and a triple bogey early in the final round with six birdies on the back nine — the last from six feet on the 18th hole — for a 5-under 67 and a one-shot victory over Aaron Rai and Tyrrell Hatton in the BMW PGA Championship at Wentworth in Virginia Water, England.

Fox started shaking his right fist as the final birdie putt was inches from going in, the final stroke of a masterpiece over his last 15 holes that carried the New Zealander to his fourth European tour title and by the far the biggest of his career.

"I played great," Fox said. "Pretty much didn't miss a shot from the third hole onwards and saw a couple of putts go in, and it was pretty cool feeling on the last to know I had one to win and actually make it."

Ludvig Aberg, the Swedish rookie going for his second straight win, started with a two-shot lead that was long gone by the time he made the turn.

Aberg took two double bogeys on the front nine and closed with a 76, tied for 10th.

It was an inspiring day for Europe as it relates to the Ryder Cup. All 12 players were at Wentworth, and all 12 made the cut, including captain Luke Donald.

At one point early Sunday, the leading six players were Ryder Cup members and nine of them were among the top 20. In the end, Viktor Hovland (67) finished fifth, followed by Tommy Fleetwood (72) and Rory McIlroy (65).

McIlroy had to make birdie on the final hole Friday in the dark to make the cut, and he wound up with another top 10.

"To shoot the scores I've done over the last two days, it's been nice, and I saw some improvements from Thursday and Friday, which has been great," he said. "Now it's just all about looking forward to Rome and getting the game in the best shape possible."

• PGA TOUR CHAMPIONS: Steve Stricker holed a 20-foot eagle putt to catch K.J. Choi and then picked up a pair of late birdies that sent him to a 4-under 66 to win the Sanford International in Sioux Falls, S.D., his sixth victory this year.

Stricker earned $300,000, leaving him just short of $4 million and setting a record for most money in a single season on the 50-and-older circuit.

He has not finished worse than eighth all year, and three of those six wins have come in majors on the senior circuit. He won the Sanford International for the third time.

PUBLIC NOTICE
Availability of Draft Fiscal Year Consolidated Annual Performance Evaluation Report (CAPER)

The City of Gaithersburg is preparing the Federal Fiscal Year 2022 Consolidated Annual Performance Evaluation Report (CAPER), which covers the grant period of July 1, 2022, to June 30, 2023. Submission of this Plan is a requirement to receive Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) funding from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). All activities funded by CDBG must meet one of HUD's national objectives and goals: to provide decent housing, a suitable living environment, and expanded economic opportunities, principally for low- to moderate-income persons.

The City's draft FY 22 CAPER reports on accomplishments of the past fiscal year and progress towards achieving goals identified in the 2018-2023 Consolidated Plan and the FY22 Annual Action Plan.

Residents and interested parties may provide feedback to the City on its FY22 CAPER in several ways. The Draft CAPER will be available for public comment for a 15-day period beginning on September 7, 2023, and ending at 5 p.m. on September 24, 2023. The Draft FY22 CAPER will be available for review and public comment at the following locations:

City Hall
31 S. Summit Ave.
Gaithersburg, MD 20877

Quince Orchard Library
15831 Quince Orchard Blvd.
Gaithersburg, MD 20878

The Draft FY22 CAPER will also be available for review on the City's webpage at www.gaithersburgmd.gov/services/housing-services.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Americans with Disabilities Act, any person requiring reasonable accommodation related to a disability is asked to advise the City. Contact Human Resources Department at hr@gaithersburgmd.gov or 301-258-6327.

For further information, contact Brittany Marinello at 240-805-1022 or brittany.marinello@gaithersburgmd.gov.

840 Trustees Sale - DC

512 RIDGE ROAD SE UNIT 206, WASHINGTON DC 20019

In execution of the Superior Court for the District of Columbia's Decree of Sale in Case: 2017 CA 003240 R(RP), the undersigned Trustee(s) will offer for sale the property known as 512 RIDGE ROAD SE UNIT 206, WASHINGTON DC 20019 at a public auction within the offices of, HARVEY WEST AUCTIONEERS, INC. 5335 Wisconsin Avenue NW Suite 440, Washington, DC 20015 202-463-4567 On OCTOBER 10, 2023 AT 11:00 A.M, the land and premises situated in the District of Columbia, and designated as and being Lot 2019 in Square 5396, and more particularly described in the Deed of Trust recorded in the Land Records of the District of Columbia, on APRIL 24, 2006 as Instrument Number: 2006053646.

The property will be sold by Trustee's Deed "as is" without any covenant, expressed or implied, in Fee Simple, subject to conditions, restrictions, easements, and all other recorded instruments superior to the Deed of Trust referenced above, and subject to ratification by the Court

TERMS OF SALE: A deposit of the lesser of $10,000.00 or 10% of the sale price will be required at time of sale in cash or certified funds. The deposit required to bid at the auction is waived for the Noteholder and any of its successors or assigns. The Noteholder may bid up to the credit and may submit a written bid to the Trustee which shall be announced at sale. The balance of the purchase price is to be paid in cash within 60 days of final ratification of the sale by the Court.

TIME IS OF THE ESSENCE. If purchaser fails to settle within the aforesaid sixty (60) days of the ratification, the purchaser agrees to pay the Trustees' reasonable attorney fees as ordered by the Court, plus all costs incurred, if the Trustees have filed the appropriate motion with the Court to resell the property. Purchaser waives personal service of any paper filed with the Court in connection with such motion and any Show Cause Order issued by the Court and expressly agrees to accept service of any such paper or Order by certified mail and regular mail sent to the address provided by the purchaser and as recorded on the documents executed by the purchaser at the time of the sale. Service shall be deemed effective upon the purchaser 3 days after postmarked by the United States Post Office. It is expressly agreed by the purchaser that actual receipt of the certified mail is not required for service to be effective. If the purchaser fails to go to settlement the deposit shall be forfeited to the Trustees and all expenses of this sale (including attorney fees and full commission on the gross sales price of the sale) shall be charged against and paid from the forfeited deposit. In the event of resale the defaulting purchaser shall not be entitled to any surplus proceeds or profits resulting from any resale of the property regardless of any improvements made to the real property. Interest is to be paid on the unpaid purchase money at the rate contained in the Deed of Trust Note from the date of sale to the date the funds are received in the office of the Trustees. In the event that the settlement is delayed for ANY REASON WHATSOEVER, there shall be no abatement of interest. Taxes, water rent, condominium fees and/or homeowner association dues, all public charges/assessments payable on an annual basis, including sanitary and/or metropolitan district charges, if applicable, to be adjusted for the current year to date of sale and assumed thereafter by the purchaser. Purchaser shall be responsible for the costs of all transfer taxes, documentary stamps and all other costs incident to settlement. Purchaser shall be responsible for physical possession of the property. Purchaser assumes the risk of loss from the date of sale forward. The sale is subject to post sale audit by the Mortgage holder to determine whether the borrower filed bankruptcy, entered into any repayment/forbearance agreement, reinstated or paid off prior to the sale. In any such event the Purchaser agrees that upon notification by the Trustees of such event the sale is null and void and of no legal effect and the deposit returned without interest. 840 Trustees Sale - DC

517 PARKLAND PLACE, SOUTHEAST, WASHINGTON DC 20032

In execution of the Superior Court for the District of Columbia's Decree of Sale in Case: 2016 CA 008366 R(RP), the undersigned Trustee(s) will offer for sale the property known as 517 PARKLAND PLACE, SOUTHEAST, WASHINGTON DC 20032. at a public auction within the offices of, HARVEY WEST AUCTIONEERS, INC. 5335 Wisconsin Avenue NW Suite 440, Washington, DC 20015 202-463 4567 On SEPTEMBER 26, 2023 AT 11:00 A.M, the land and premises situated in the District of Columbia, and designated as and being Lot 0057 in Square 5988, and more particularly described in the Deed of Trust recorded in the Land Records of the District of Columbia, on MAY 10, 2008 as Instrument Number: 2008062807.

The property will be sold by Trustee's Deed "as is" without any covenant, expressed or implied, in Fee Simple, subject to conditions, restrictions, easements, and all other recorded instruments superior to the Deed of Trust referenced above, and subject to ratification by the Court

TERMS OF SALE: A deposit of the lesser of $35,000.00 or 10% of the sale price will be required at time of sale in cash or certified funds. The deposit required to bid at the auction is waived for the Noteholder and any of its successors or assigns. The Noteholder may bid up to the credit and may submit a written bid to the Trustee which shall be announced at sale. The balance of the purchase price is to be paid in cash within 60 days of final ratification of the sale by the Court.

TIME IS OF THE ESSENCE.

If purchaser fails to settle within the aforesaid sixty (60) days of the ratification, the purchaser agrees to pay the Trustees' reasonable attorney fees as ordered by the Court, plus all costs incurred, if the Trustees have filed the appropriate motion with the Court to resell the property. Purchaser waives personal service of any paper filed with the Court in connection with such motion and any Show Cause Order issued by the Court and expressly agrees to accept service of any such paper or Order by certified mail and regular mail sent to the address provided by the purchaser and as recorded on the documents executed by the purchaser at the time of the sale. Service shall be deemed effective upon the purchaser 3 days after postmarked by the United States Post Office. It is expressly agreed by the purchaser that actual receipt of the certified mail is not required for service to be effective. If the purchaser fails to go to settlement the deposit shall be forfeited to the Trustees and all expenses of this sale (including attorney fees and full commission on the gross sales price of the sale) shall be charged against and paid from the forfeited deposit. In the event of resale the defaulting purchaser shall not be entitled to any surplus proceeds or profits resulting from any resale of the property regardless of any improvements made to the real property. Interest is to be paid on the unpaid purchase money at the rate contained in the Deed of Trust Note from the date of sale to the date the funds are received in the office of the Trustees. In the event that the settlement is delayed for ANY REASON WHATSOEVER, there shall be no abatement of interest. Taxes, water rent, condominium fees and/or homeowner association dues, all public charges/assessments payable on an annual basis, including sanitary and/or metropolitan district charges, if applicable, to be adjusted for the current year to date of sale and assumed thereafter by the purchaser. Purchaser shall be responsible for the costs of all transfer taxes, documentary stamps and all other costs incident to settlement. Purchaser shall be responsible for physical possession of the property. Purchaser assumes the risk of loss from the date of sale forward. The sale is subject to post sale audit by the Mortgage holder to determine whether the borrower filed bankruptcy, entered into any repayment/forbearance agreement, reinstated or paid off prior to the sale. In any such event the Purchaser agrees that upon notification by the Trustees of such event the sale is null and void and of no legal effect and the deposit returned without interest. TRUSTEE'S SALE OF VALUABLE CONDOMINIUM UNIT #Unit 205, CONTAINED WITHIN PREMISES of the Bon Wit Plaza Unit Owners Association, 2401 H Street, NW, Unit 205, Washington, DC 20037. Pursuant to the District of Columbia Condominium Act of 1976, as amended, the Condominium Declaration recorded August 24, 1979 as Instrument No. 28219, and the Bylaws relating thereto recorded on August 24, 1979 as Instrument No. 28219 among the Land Records of the District of Columbia, and any recorded amendments thereto as of the date hereof, and pursuant to D.C. Code Section 42-1903.13, establishing that the Executive Officer shall be the Trustee to conduct the foreclosure sale, notice was filed on December 22, 2022. The Trustee shall sell at public auction on Thursday, September 28, 2023 at 1:55 pm at the office of ALEX COOPER AUCTIONEERS, INC., 4910 Massachusetts Avenue, NW, #100, Washington, DC 20016, the following described premises situated in the District of Columbia:
Part of Lot 17 in Square 30 in a subdivision made by Meyer and Bessie R. Siegel, as per plat recorded in Liber 140 at folio 49, in the Office of the Surveyor for the District of Columbia.
The Part of the land conveyed being more particularly designated as Unit No. 205 and The Limited Common Elements appurtenant thereto, including Limited Common Element Parking Space No. N/A of the "BON WIT CONDOMINIUM", according to the Declaration of Condominium dated August 23, 1979 and recorded August 24, 1979 as Instrument No. 28219, and the By-laws relating thereto, dated August 23, 1979 and recorded August 24, 1979, as Instrument No. 28220, and further amended by the First Amendment to the By-laws dated November 8, 1982 and recorded November 8, 1982 as Instrument No. 28939, respectively among the Land Records of the District of Columbia, and as per plat of Condominium subdivision recorded in Condominium Book No. 23 at page 8, in the Office of the Surveyor for the District of Columbia.
NOTE: At the date hereof, the above-described land is designated on the Records of the Assessor of the District of Columbia for assessment and taxation purposes as Lot 2008 in Square 30.
TOGETHER WITH all of the appurtenances incident to said Unit, as continued in said Declaration of the Condominium. The Condominium Declaration allocates to the Condominium Unit and undivided interest (stated as a percentage) in the common elements of the Condominium. The Percentage Interest of the Condominium Unit is set forth in Condominium Declaration.
TERMS OF SALE: Sold subject to real estate taxes, and subject to other superior liens, encumbrances and municipal assessments, if any. The Association is foreclosing on the balance of the Association's statutory lien against the Property. Other oral information regarding 2401 H Street, NW, Unit 205 may be disclosed at the time of the sale. A deposit of $10,000.00 shall be required at time of sale and such deposit shall be a certified check, cashier's check, or in such other form as the Association, in its sole discretion, requires. All conveyancing, recording, recordation tax, transfer tax etc. shall be at the purchaser's sole expense.
The balance of the purchase price, together with interest at the rate of 10% per annum from date of sale to date of receipt of the balance of the purchase price, must be paid by cashier's check or certified check, and all other terms shall be complied with within 30 days. Otherwise, the deposit is forfeited and the property may be re-advertised and resold at the discretion of the Trustee and at the risk and cost of the defaulting purchaser. The Trustee shall convey a deed pursuant to D.C. Code Section 42-1903.13, and makes no further representations or warranties as to title. The Trustee cannot guarantee clear title or the purchaser's ability to obtain title insurance. For this reason, the purchaser may not be able to obtain financing but must be able to pay the entire purchase price balance, in any case, within 30 days from the date of auction. In the event of the failure on the part of the Trustee to convey such deed, the purchaser's sole remedy shall be the return of the deposit.

The balance of the purchase price is to be paid in cash within 60 days of final ratification of the sale by the Court.

TIME IS OF THE ESSENCE. If purchaser fails to settle within the aforesaid sixty (60) days of the ratification, the purchaser agrees to pay the Trustees' reasonable attorney fees as ordered by the Court, plus all costs incurred, if the Trustees have filed the appropriate motion with the Court to resell the property. Purchaser waives personal service of any paper filed with the Court in connection with such motion and any Show Cause Order issued by the Court and expressly agrees to accept service of any such paper or Order by certified mail and regular mail sent to the address provided by the purchaser and as recorded on the documents executed by the purchaser at the time of the sale. Service shall be deemed effective upon the purchaser 3 days after postmarked by the United States Post Office. It is expressly agreed by the purchaser that actual receipt of the certified mail is not required for service to be effective. If the purchaser fails to go to settlement the deposit shall be forfeited to the Trustees and all expenses of this sale (including attorney fees and full commission on the gross sales price of the sale) shall be charged against and paid from the forfeited deposit. In the event of resale the defaulting purchaser shall not be entitled to any surplus proceeds or profits resulting from any resale of the property regardless of any improvements made to the real property. Interest is to be paid on the unpaid purchase money at the rate contained in the Deed of Trust Note from the date of sale to the date the funds are received in the office of the Trustees. In the event that the settlement is delayed for ANY REASON WHATSOEVER, there shall be no abatement of interest. Taxes, water rent, condominium fees and/or homeowner association dues, all public charges/assessments payable on an annual basis, including sanitary and/or metropolitan district charges, if applicable, to be adjusted for the current year to date of sale and assumed thereafter by the purchaser. Purchaser shall be responsible for the costs of all transfer taxes, documentary stamps and all other costs incident to settlement. Purchaser shall be responsible for physical possession of the property. Purchaser assumes the risk of loss from the date of sale forward. The sale is subject to post sale audit by the Mortgage holder to determine whether the borrower filed bankruptcy, entered into any repayment/forbearance agreement, reinstated or paid off prior to the sale. In any such event the Purchaser agrees that upon notification by the Trustees of such event the sale is null and void and of no legal effect and the deposit returned without interest. TRUSTEE'S SALE
9401 CHELTENHAM AVENUE
Clinton, MD 20735

Under a power of sale contained in a certain Deed of Trust dated July 14, 2010 and recorded in Deed Book 32355 at Page 498 among the Land Records of PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, Maryland, default having occurred under the terms thereof, the Substitute Trustees will sell at public auction at the PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, FRONT OF THE DUVAL WING OF THE COURTHOUSE COMPLEX 14735 MAIN ST, UPPER MARLBORO, MD 20772, on

OCTOBER 3, 2023 AT 1:45 PM

ALL THAT FEE SIMPLE LOT OF GROUND, together with the buildings and improvements thereon situated in PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, Maryland, located at the above address and more fully described in the aforementioned Deed of Trust (the "Property").

TAX ID#: 09-0949941

TERMS OF SALE: A deposit of $16,000 by cashier's/certified check or such other form as the Substitute Trustee may allow, in their sole discretion, required at time of sale except for the party secured by the Deed of Trust. Risk of loss on purchaser from date and time of auction. The property and improvements will be sold in "as is" physical condition without either express or implied warranty of any kind and subject to all conditions, restrictions and agreements of record affecting the same. Balance of the purchase price to be paid in cash within ten days of final ratification of sale. Interest to be paid on the unpaid purchase money at the rate of 3.875% from the date of sale to the date funds are received in the office of the Substitute Trustees. There will be no abatement of interest in the event additional funds are tendered before settlement or if settlement is delayed for any reason.

TIME IS OF THE ESSENCE FOR THE PURCHASER. Adjustment of all real property taxes, including agricultural taxes, if applicable, and any and all public and/or private charges or assessments, including water/sewer charges and ground rent, to be adjusted to date of sale and thereafter assumed by purchaser. Condominium fees and/or homeowners association dues, if any, shall be assumed by the purchaser from the date of sale forward. Cost of all documentary stamps, transfer taxes and settlement expenses shall be borne by the purchaser. Purchaser shall be responsible for obtaining physical possession of the Property. If the Substitute Trustees are unable to convey title for any reason, the purchaser's sole remedy in law and equity shall be limited to a refund of the deposit without interest. If the Purchaser defaults, the deposit shall be forfeited to the Substitute Trustees for application against all expenses, attorney's fees and the full commission on the sale price of the above-scheduled foreclosure sale. In the event of default, all expenses of this sale (including attorney's fees and the full commission on the gross sale price of this sale) shall be charged against and paid out of the forfeited deposit. The Trustees may then re-advertise and resell the Property at the risk and expense of the defaulting purchaser or may avail themselves of any legal or equitable remedies against the defaulting purchaser without re-selling the Property. In the event of a resale, the defaulting purchaser shall not be entitled to receive the surplus, if any, even if such surplus results from improvements to the Property by said defaulting purchaser and the defaulting purchaser shall be liable to the Trustees and secured party for reasonable attorney's fees and expenses incurred in connection with all litigation involving the Property or the proceeds of the resale. This sale is subject to post-sale audit of the status of the loan secured by the Deed of Trust including, but not limited to, determining whether prior to sale a bankruptcy was filed; forbearance, repayment or other agreement was entered into; or the loan was reinstated or paid off. In any such event, this sale shall be null and void and Purchaser's sole remedy shall be return of deposit without interest.

The purchaser waives personal service and accepts service by first class mail and certified mail addressed to the address provided by said Purchaser as identified on the Memorandum of Sale for any Motion or Show Cause Order incident to this sale including a Motion to Default Purchaser and for Resale of the Property. In the event of a resale, the defaulting purchaser shall not be entitled to receive any benefit from the resale, including, but not limited to, additional proceeds or surplus which may arise therefrom. Interest to be paid on the unpaid purchase money at the rate pursuant to the Deed of Trust Note from the date of sale to the date funds are received by the Substitute Trustees. There will be no abatement of interest in the event additional funds are tendered at the time of sale or any time prior to settlement or if the settlement is delayed for any reason. In the event that the Secured Party executes a forbearance agreement with the borrower(s) described in the above-mentioned Deed of Trust, or allows the borrower(s) to execute their right to reinstate or payoff the subject loan, prior to the sale, with or without the Substitute Trustee's prior knowledge, this Contract shall be null and void and of no effect, and the Purchaser's sole remedy shall be the return of the deposit without interest. Purchaser shall pay for documentary stamps, transfer taxes and settlement expenses. Taxes, ground rent, water rent, condominium fees and/or homeowner association dues, all public charges/assessments payable on an annual basis, including sanitary and/or metropolitan district charges, if applicable, shall be adjusted to the date of sale and assumed thereafter by the purchaser. Purchaser shall be responsible for obtaining physical possession of the property. Purchaser assumes the risk of loss or damage to the property from the date of sale forward. If the Substitute Trustee(s) are unable to convey insurable title for any reason, the purchaser(s) sole remedy in law or equity shall be limited to a refund of the aforementioned deposit without interest. In the event the sale is not ratified for any reason, the Purchaser's sole remedy, at law or equity, is the return of the deposit without interest. (File # 22-009175)

TRUSTEE'S SALE
Bowie, MD 20721

Under a power of sale contained in a certain Deed of Trust dated August 21, 2014 and recorded in Deed Book 36326 at Page 014 among the Land Records of PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, Maryland, default having occurred under the terms thereof, the Substitute Trustees will sell at public auction at the PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, FRONT OF THE DUVAL WING OF THE COURTHOUSE COMPLEX 14735 MAIN ST, UPPER MARLBORO, MD 20772, on

OCTOBER 3, 2023 AT 1:45 PM

ALL THAT FEE SIMPLE LOT OF GROUND, together with the buildings and improvements thereon situated in PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, Maryland, located at the above address and more fully described in the aforementioned Deed of Trust (the "Property").

TERMS OF SALE: A deposit of $52,000 by cashier's/certified check or such other form as the Substitute Trustee may allow, in their sole discretion, required at time of sale except for the party secured by the Deed of Trust. Risk of loss on purchaser from date and time of auction. The property and improvements will be sold in "as is" physical condition without either express or implied warranty of any kind and subject to all conditions, restrictions and agreements of record affecting the same. Balance of the purchase price to be paid in cash within ten days of final ratification of sale. Interest to be paid on the unpaid purchase money at the rate of 3.875% from the date of sale to the date funds are received in the office of the Substitute Trustees. There will be no abatement of interest in the event additional funds are tendered before settlement or if settlement is delayed for any reason.
TIME IS OF THE ESSENCE FOR THE PURCHASER. Adjustment of all real property taxes, including agricultural taxes, if applicable, and any and all public and/or private charges or assessments, including water/sewer charges and ground rent, to be adjusted to date of sale and thereafter assumed by purchaser. Condominium fees and/or homeowners association dues, if any, shall be assumed by the purchaser from the date of sale forward. Cost of all documentary stamps, transfer taxes and settlement expenses shall be borne by the purchaser. Purchaser shall be responsible for obtaining physical possession of the Property. If the Substitute Trustees are unable to convey title for any reason, the purchaser's sole remedy in law and equity shall be limited to a refund of the deposit without interest. If the Purchaser defaults, the deposit shall be forfeited to the Substitute Trustees for application against all expenses, attorney's fees and the full commission on the sale price of the above-scheduled foreclosure sale. In the event of default, all expenses of this sale (including attorney's fees and the full commission on the gross sale price of this sale) shall be charged against and paid out of the forfeited deposit. The Trustees may then re-advertise and resell the Property at the risk and expense of the defaulting purchaser or may avail themselves of any legal or equitable remedies against the defaulting purchaser without re-selling the Property. In the event of a resale, the defaulting purchaser shall not be entitled to receive the surplus, if any, even if such surplus results from improvements to the Property by said defaulting purchaser and the defaulting purchaser shall be liable to the Trustees and secured party for reasonable attorney's fees and expenses incurred in connection with all litigation involving the Property or the proceeds of the resale. This sale is subject to post-sale audit of the status of the loan secured by the Deed of Trust including, but not limited to, determining whether prior to sale a bankruptcy was filed; forbearance, repayment or other agreement was entered into; or the loan was reinstated or paid off. In any such event, this sale shall be null and void and Purchaser's sole remedy shall be return of deposit without interest.

SUBSTITUTE TRUSTEES' SALE OF IMPROVED REAL PROPERTY
La Plata, MD 20646

Under a power of sale contained in a Deed of Trust from SHENELL S. DAVIS AND LEVON E. DAVIS, dated January 26, 2006 and recorded in Liber 05679, folio 0557 among the Land Records of CHARLES COUNTY, MD, default having occurred thereunder (Foreclosure Case docketed as Case No.C-08-CV-22-000382; Tax ID No.01-068717) the Sub. Trustees will sell at public auction at the CHARLES COUNTY COURTHOUSE, located at 200 CHARLES STREET (IN THE BREEZEWAY BETWEEN CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS), LA PLATA, MD 20646, on

OCTOBER 4, 2023 at 12:30 PM

ALL THAT FEE SIMPLE LOT OF GROUND and improvements thereon situated in CHARLES COUNTY, MD and more fully described in above referenced Deed of Trust.

The property will be sold in an "as is" condition and subject to conditions, restrictions and agreements of record affecting the same, if any and with no warranty of any kind.

Terms of Sale: A deposit $50,000.00 will be required at the time of sale, such deposit to be in CERTIFIED CHECK OR BY CASHIER'S CHECK, CASH WILL NOT BE ACCEPTED. Balance of the purchase price to be paid in cash within ten days of final ratification of sale by the Circuit Court for CHARLES COUNTY. Time is of the essence as to the purchaser. If the purchaser defaults, the deposit shall be forfeited and the property shall be resold at the purchaser's risk and expense. The purchaser waives personal service and accepts service by first class mail and certified mail addressed to the address provided by said Purchaser as identified on the Memorandum of Sale for any Motion or Show Cause Order incident to this sale including a Motion to Default Purchaser and for Resale of the Property. In the event of a resale, the defaulting purchaser shall not be entitled to receive any benefit from the resale, including, but not limited to, additional proceeds or surplus which may arise therefrom. Interest to be paid on the unpaid purchase money at the rate pursuant to the Deed of Trust Note from the date of sale to the date funds are received by the Substitute Trustees. There will be no abatement of interest in the event additional funds are tendered at the time of sale or any time prior to settlement or if the settlement is delayed for any reason. In the event that the Secured Party executes a forbearance agreement with the borrower(s) described in the above-mentioned Deed of Trust, or allows the borrower(s) to execute their right to reinstate or payoff the subject loan, prior to the sale, with or without the Substitute Trustee's prior knowledge, this Contract shall be null and void and of no effect, and the Purchaser's sole remedy shall be the return of the deposit without interest. Purchaser shall pay for documentary stamps, transfer taxes and settlement expenses. Taxes, ground rent, water rent, condominium fees and/or homeowner association dues, all public charges/assessments payable on an annual basis, including sanitary and/or metropolitan district charges, if applicable, shall be adjusted to the date of sale and assumed thereafter by the purchaser. Purchaser shall be responsible for obtaining physical possession of the property. Purchaser assumes the risk of loss or damage to the property from the date of sale forward. If the Substitute Trustee(s) are unable to convey insurable title for any reason, the purchaser(s) sole remedy in law or equity shall be limited to a refund of the aforementioned deposit without interest. In the event the sale is not ratified for any reason, the Purchaser's sole remedy, at law or equity, is the return of the deposit without interest. (File # 20-006953)
